of such appraisement shall in each case be paid and applied, and in what manner and form, and by whom the discharge from any such apprenticeship shall thereupon be given, executed and recorded; and it is also necessary, for the preservation of peace throughout this Island, that proper regulations should be framed and established for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers, and for insuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer, and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter for any hired service during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer; and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers, and for the prevention or punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer, and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance of the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourer, and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourers during their term of apprenticeship from this Island: And whereas it will also be necessary for the protection of such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, that various regulations should be framed and established in the said Island for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as they are hereinbefore declared entitled to receive, and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles, in cases where the laws at present existing in this Island may not, in the case of slaves, have made any regulation or any adequate regulation for that purpose; and it is also necessary that proper rules should be established for the prevention and punishment of any frauds which might be practised, or of any omissions or neglects which might occur, respecting the quantity or the quality of the supplies so to be furnished, or respecting the periods for the delivery of the same: And whereas it is necessary, in those cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourers aforesaid may, either wholly or in part, be raised by themselves by the cultivation of ground to be set apart and allotted for that purpose, that proper regulations should be made and established as to the extent of such grounds, and as to the distance at which such grounds may be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourers, and respecting the deductions to be made from the cultivation of such grounds from the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereinbefore declared liable to labour: And whereas it may also be necessary, by such regulations as aforesaid, to secure to the said prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment for their own benefit of that portion of their time during which they are not hereby required to labour in the service of their respective employers, and for securing exactness in the computation of the time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereby required to labour in the service of such their respective employers; and it is also necessary that provision should be made for preventing the imposition of task-work on any such apprenticed labourer without his or her free consent to undertake the same; but it may be necessary, by such regulations in certain cases, to require and provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake; and it is also necessary that regulations should be made respecting any voluntary contracts into which any apprenticed labourers may enter with their respective employers or with any other person for hired service for any future period, and for limiting the greatest period of time to which such voluntary contract may extend, and for enforcing the punctual and effectual performance of such voluntary contracts on the part both of such apprenticed labourers and of the person or persons engaging for their employment and hire; and it is also necessary that regulations should be made for the prevention or punishment of any cruelty, injustice or other wrong or injury which may be done to, or inflicted upon, any such apprenticed labourers by the persons entitled to their services; and it is also necessary that proper regulations should be made respecting the manner and form in which such indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid shall be made on behalf of such children as aforesaid, and respecting the registering and preservation of all such indentures: And whereas it is also necessary that provision should be made for ensuring promptitude and dispatch, and for preventing all unnecessary expense in the discharge by the justices of the peace holding such special commissions as aforesaid, of the jurisdiction and authorities thereby committed to them, and for enabling such justices to decide, in a summary way, such questions as may be brought before them in that capacity, and for the division of the said Island into districts for the purposes of such jurisdiction, and for the frequent and punctual visitation by such justices of the peace of the apprenticed labourers within such their respective districts; and it is also necessary that regulations should be made for indemnifying and protecting such justices of the peace in the upright execution and discharge of their duties.

15. And be it further enacted and declared, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Council and Assembly of this Island, to pass such Acts as may be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into full and complete effect.

16. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for the Governor, Council and Assembly of this Island, to authorize any person or persons entitled to the services of any such apprenticed labourer, or any other person or persons other than such justices justices of the peace holding such special commissions as aforesaid, to punish any such apprenticed labourer for any offence by him or her committed or alleged to have been committed, by the whipping, beating or imprisonment of his or her person, or by any other personal or other correction or punishment whatsoever, or by any addition to the hours of labour hereinbefore limited, nor to authorize any court, judge or justice of the peace, to punish any such apprenticed labourer, being a female, for any offence by her committed, by whipping or beating her person; and that every enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order for any such purpose, in any such Act contained, shall be and is hereby declared to be absolutely null and void and of no effect: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained doth or shall extend to and exempt any apprenticed labourer in the said Island from the operation of any law or police regulation which is or shall be in force therein for the prevention or punishment of any offence, such law or police regulation being in force against and applicable to all other persons of free condition.

17. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any magistrate other than such justice of the peace holding such special commissions as aforesaid, to take cognizance of any offence committed or alleged to have been committed by such apprenticed labourer, or by his or her employer, in such their relation to each other, or of the breach, violation or neglect of any of the obligations owed by them to each other, or of any question, matter or thing incident to or arising out of the relations subsisting between such apprenticed labourers and the persons respectively entitled to their services; and every enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order in any such Acts to the contrary contained, shall be and is hereby declared to be null and void and of no effect.

18. And it is hereby further declared and enacted, that the special justice or justices to be appointed for this Island shall have, exercise and enjoy a sole and exclusive jurisdiction over, and shall solely and exclusively take cognizance of all such offences or alleged offences as last aforesaid, and of every such breach, violation or neglect of any of the aforesaid obligations, and of every such question, matter or thing as aforesaid, any law, custom or usage in this Island to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the supreme courts of record, or the superior courts of civil and criminal justice in this Island.

19. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall by any such Act of Legislature be declared or rendered liable for and in respect of any offence by him or her committed, or for any cause or upon any ground or pretext whatsoever, except as hereafter is mentioned, to any prolongation of his or her term of apprenticeship, or to any new or additional apprenticeship, or to any such additional labour as shall impose upon any such apprenticed labourer the obligation of working in the service or for the benefit of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, for more than 15 extra hours in the whole in any one week; but every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order, shall be and is hereby declared null and void and of no effect: provided nevertheless, that any such Act of Legislature may contain provisions for compelling any apprenticed labourer who shall during his or her apprenticeship wilfully absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, either to serve his or her employer after the expiration of his or her apprenticeship for so long a time as he or she shall have so absented himself or herself from such service, or to make satisfaction to his or her employer for the loss sustained by such absence (except so far as he or she shall have made satisfaction for such absence, either out of such extra hours as aforesaid or otherwise); but nevertheless, so that such extra service or compensation shall not be compelled after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such apprentice.

20. Provided always, and be it hereby further enacted, that neither under the provisions of this Act, nor under the obligations imposed by this Act, or to be imposed by any Act of Legislature, shall any apprenticed labourer be compelled or compellable to labour on Sundays, except in works of necessity, or in domestic services, or in the protection of property, or in tending of cattle; nor shall any apprenticed labourer be liable to be hindered or prevented from attending anywhere on Sundays for religious worship, at his or her free will or pleasure, but shall be at full liberty so to do without any let, denial or interruption whatsoever.

21. And whereas it may be expedient that persons in the condition of apprenticed labourers should during the continuance of such their apprenticeship be exempted from the performance of certain civil and military services, and be disqualified from holding certain civil and military offices, and from the enjoyment of certain political franchises within the said Island, and be exempted from being arrested or imprisoned for debt; Be it therefore enacted, that nothing in this Act contained extends or shall be considered to extend to interfere with or prevent the enactment by the respective Governor, Council and Assembly of this Island, for exempting any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, during the continuance of such their apprenticeship, from any such civil or military service as aforesaid, or for disqualifying them or any of them during the continuance of any such apprenticeships from the enjoyment or discharge of any such political franchise as aforesaid, or for exempting them during the continuance of such apprenticeships from being arrested or imprisoned for debt.

AN ACT for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island, and for the Establishment of a System of Apprenticeship for a limited time in lieu thereof.

Preamble.

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of St. Christopher, humbly reserving to ourselves the right of claiming all and all manner of compensation for all and every injury which may arise to the interests of this Island of St. Christopher, by the operation of an Act passed in the 3d & 4th year of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," pray Your Majesty that it may be enacted,

All slaves within this Island on 1st August 1834, and who shall be of the full age of six years and upwards, shall become apprenticed labourers.

1. And be it and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who, in conformity with the laws now in force in this Island, shall, on or before the said 1st day of August 1834, have been duly registered as slaves in the said Island, and who, on the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be actually within the same, and who shall by such registry appear to be, on the 1st day of August 1834, of the full age of six years or upwards, shall by force and virtue of this Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers: provided that, for the purposes aforesaid, every slave engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas, and belonging to this Island, or who shall be absent from this Island against his or her master's or mistress's leave, or without his or her master's or mistress's consent, shall be deemed and taken to be within this Island.

Slaves absent from the Island without the owner's leave, and slaves employed on the seas, to be deemed to be within this Island.

Declaratory of the persons who shall be entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers.

2. And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer, such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer, as would for the time being have been entitled to his or her services as a slave if this or any other Act of the Legislature of this Island, or any Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, for the abolition of slavery, had not been made.

Apprenticeship of prædials to continue to 1st August 1840.

3. And be it further enacted, that no person who, by virtue of this Act, or of any other Act of the Legislature of this Island, or of any enactment of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, shall become a prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1840; and that during such his or her apprenticeship, no such prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall be bound or liable, by virtue of such apprenticeship, to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week.

Not to be compelled to labour for more than 45 hours in each week.

Apprenticeship of non-prædials limited to 1st August 1838.

4. And be it further enacted, that no person who, by virtue of this Act, or of any other Act of the Legislature of this Island, or of any enactment of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland as aforesaid, shall become non-prædial apprenticed labourer, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1838.

Slaves declared to be free on the 1st August 1834, but subject to the obligations by law imposed on apprenticed labourers.

Children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, to be free from their birth.

5. And be it further enacted, that, subject to the obligations by law imposed upon apprenticed labourers, all and every the persons who, on the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be holden in slavery in this Island, shall, upon and from after the said 1st day of August 1834, become and be to all intents and purposes free and discharged of and from all and all manner of slavery, and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted; and that the children there after to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, shall in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, slavery shall be and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished and declared unlawful within this Island.

Saint Christopher.

AN ACT for prescribing the Powers and Duties of Special Magistrates.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient that the special magistrates should be upheld in the discharge of their duties, and that all persons having occasion to resort to them should be put to the least possible expense on such occasions: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of St. Christopher, pray Your Most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained,

Special justices invested with the sole and exclusive jurisdiction over offences committed by or against apprenticed labourers.

1. And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the several justices of the peace holding special commissions granted to them under and by virtue of a certain Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, made and passed in the 3d and 4th year of the reign of His present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;" shall, within this Island, have, exercise and enjoy a sole and exclusive jurisdiction over, and shall solely and exclusively take cognizance of all offences or alleged offences committed by or against any apprenticed labourer for any cause, matter or thing connected with, or arising out of or from the relation of employer and labourer, any law, custom or usage to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the superior courts of criminal and civil jurisdiction in this Island.

But the powers of the superior courts retained.

Special justices to visit every estate once in every fortnight, and oftener if necessary.

2. And be it further enacted, that every special stipendiary magistrate shall visit, and he is hereby authorized and empowered and directed once in every fortnight, or oftener if need be, to visit every plantation within his district, upon which ten or any greater number of apprenticed labourers shall be employed, there to take cognizance of any cases which may be brought before him, and for the purpose of observing the behaviour and condition of such apprenticed labourers.

Special magistrates to keep a journal of cases brought before them, in the form herein prescribed.

3. And be it further enacted, that every special magistrate shall keep a journal of all cases which may be brought before him, in which he shall enter; first, the date of the complaint; secondly, the name of the complainant; thirdly, the substance of the complaint; fourthly, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; fifthly, the substance of the evidence; sixthly, his decision on the case; seventhly, whether the decision has been carried into effect; eighthly, any general remarks which he may think necessary; and that any person, party thereto, desiring a copy and certificate of such entries in any particular case, shall be entitled to and receive the same from such special magistrate, on paying for the same the sum of 6 d. for every 100 words of such entry or entries, and the sum of 4*s.* 6 d. for every the certificate aforesaid.

Persons requiring copies of entries therein, and certificate, to pay 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 6*d.* for every 100 words.

4. And be it further enacted, that all such journals shall be kept in one uniform manner, as aforesaid.

Copies of such journals to be transmitted every 3 months to the person first in command, with affidavit of its correctness.

5. And be it further enacted, that at the end of each three months each special magistrate in the said Island shall transmit to the person first in command in the said Island a duplicate of his journal for the preceding three months, with an affidavit thereunto annexed, to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which the deponent has been engaged as such special magistrate during the three months to which it refers; and an account showing how the fines appearing therein to have been imposed, have been applied.

Special justices not to receive salary until such copies are furnished.

6. And be it further enacted, that until the person first in command in this Island shall have actually received such duplicate journal, so verified as aforesaid, and account of fines as aforesaid, the said first in command shall not be at liberty to pay or direct to be paid any salary to which such special magistrate shall or may be entitled for the three months last past.

Special justices to administer oaths to persons giving evidence in matters brought before them.

7. And be it further enacted, that the special magistrate aforesaid, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth in all matters which may be by any law cognizable by them, are hereby empowered and authorized to administer an oath or oaths to all or to any person or persons appearing before him or them, as to the truth of all matters to which such person or persons shall depose, and all persons swearing falsely as to any matter or thing whatsoever before such special magistrate, shall be and hereby are declared to be guilty of the crime of perjury, and liable to all the pains and penalties by law attaching to the same: provided always, that any apprenticed labourer swearing falsely as aforesaid, shall be punished by the said special magistrate, by whipping, not exceeding 30 stripes, if a male, and by confinement in the stocks, if a female, with distinguishing marks, for any time not exceeding three months, and that such punishment shall be a bar to any prosecution at law for the perjury; and the said special magistrates shall be and are hereby declared to be entitled to all the privileges and protections which are by law allowed to the justices assigned to keep the peace of our Lord the King throughout this Island.

Punishment of apprenticed labourers swearing falsely.

Complaints to be reduced to writing, and read over to complainant, who shall sign the same.

8. And be it further enacted, that on receiving any complaint the said special magistrate shall reduce the same into writing, and read the same over to the complainant, by whom it shall then be subscribed, and if the complaint shall appear to the said special magistrate to be immaterial, he may at once dismiss the said complaint, but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the said complainant to make oath that the said complaint is true.

Summons or warrant to issue to bring up the party charged, as may seem proper to the justices.

9. And be it further enacted, that upon taking any such complaint, to the truth of which such oath shall have been so made, the said special magistrate shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged, or shall issue a summons for his attendance, as the case may require: provided, that the warrant of arrest shall be issued in all cases which impute to the party charged a transportable offence, in all cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged will endeavour to escape, and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay; and that in all other cases the said special magistrate shall proceed in the first place by summons.

Forms of summonses and warrants to be in the forms hereunto annexed.

10. And be it further enacted, that such warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed, marked (A.), and the form of the said summons shall be in the form annexed, marked (B.)

Forms of summons to witnesses.

11. And be it further enacted, that when it may be necessary to adduce witnesses in support or denial of any charge, the said special magistrate shall and may issue a summons to every such witness in the annexed form, marked (C.)

Justices to read over complaints to all parties, and take down the answers of the party charged, and of the witnesses.

12. And be it further enacted, that the said special magistrate shall at the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, first read over the written complaint in the presence of all parties, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining, and the witnesses, taking down in writing the depositions of each witness, which shall be read over to, and signed by such witness.

Justices may adjourn proceedings.

13. And be it further enacted, that the said special magistrate may from time to time adjourn such proceedings for further inquiry, and if necessary commit the party charged to custody pending such adjournment, or to take bail in such amount as to him shall seem fit, for his appearance: provided, that every such commitment shall be in the form annexed, marked (D.), and that every such recognizance of bail be taken in the form annexed, marked (E.)

Form of commitment.

Decision to be in writing, and signed by justice.

14. And be it further enacted, that at the close of such proceedings the special magistrate shall pronounce his decision thereon, which decision he shall reduce into writing and subscribe with his hand.

Justices may dismiss or compromise complaints, or commit the party charged.

15. And be it further enacted, that at the close of such proceedings and investigation of such complaints as aforesaid, the said special magistrate shall either dismiss the complaint or sanction any compromise between the parties which he may think just, or convict the party charged, or commit him to prison to take his, her or their trial for the imputed offence.

If the complaint be dismissed, justice to state in his written decision his reasons.

16. And be it further enacted, that if such complaint shall be dismissed, the said special magistrate shall, in such his written decision as aforesaid, state whether it was so dismissed as being unproved, or as being frivolous, vexatious or malicious; and that if any such complaint shall be so dismissed as frivolous or vexatious, the said special magistrate shall and may adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to work in the service of his employer for any time not exceeding in the whole 15 extra hours in any one week, or if the complainant be the employer of such apprenticed labourer, the said special magistrate may adjudge such employer to the payment of a penalty for the use of the labourer of any sum not exceeding 50*s.*; and that if the said complaint shall be dismissed as malicious, it shall be competent to the said special magistrate, at the instance of the party charged, to adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or, if the employer of any such apprenticed labourer, to a fine not exceeding 5*l.*, for the benefit of the party charged, which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation or otherwise, in respect of such his, her or their complaint: provided, that all convictions against a party or parties charged with any offence shall be in the form hereunto annexed, marked (F.), and all convictions against any party or parties preferring a frivolous or vexatious charge, shall be in the form annexed, marked (G.), and all convictions against any party or parties for preferring a malicious charge, shall be in the form annexed, marked (H.); and that if the said special magistrate shall commit the party charged to take his, her or their trial for the imputed offence, such commitment shall be drawn up in the form annexed, marked (I.): provided always, that upon such conviction as aforesaid, the said special magistrate shall issue a warrant for the execution thereof, which warrant shall be in the form annexed, marked (K.)

Punishment for frivolous or vexatious, or malicious charges.

Convictions to be in the forms hereunto annexed.

Form of warrants for execution of convictions.

Police officers to execute summonses, warrants, &c., or jointly with any constable, as justices may direct, and the same may be executed out of the district.

17. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders so to be issued by any such special magistrate as aforesaid, shall be executed by the police officers of his district: provided always, nevertheless, that such special magistrate shall and may, as occasion may require, address the same to any constable or constables jointly with or instead of such officers of police as to him may seem requisite, and that any such summons, warrant or order, issued by any such special magistrate within his own district, shall and may be carried into effect and executed by any of the parties aforesaid, in any part of this Island, though beyond the district of the special magistrate issuing the same.

18. And

18. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons summoned as aforesaid as a witness or witnesses, shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or appearing shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question or questions legally proposed to him, her or them, by any such special magistrate, in relation to the matters depending before him, it shall be lawful for the said special magistrate to issue his warrant for the arrest of any such defaulter or defaulters, or to commit him, her or them, to close custody, there to remain until he, she or they shall submit to be sworn and examined, or to make such answers as aforesaid, and such warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed, marked (L.), and that every such commitment in this clause prescribed shall be in the form annexed, marked (M.)

Justices to commit persons summoned as witness and not appearing, or appearing shall refuse to be examined.

Form of commitments.

19. And be it further enacted, that all penalties and fines imposed by this Act shall be raised and levied by the police officer or constable to whom the warrant of levy and distress may be directed by the said special magistrate, and that such warrant of levy and distress shall be in the form annexed, marked (N.)

Form of warrant for levying fines and penalties.

20. And be it further enacted, that if any suit or action shall be commenced against any special magistrate, in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done in pursuance of this Act, and judgment shall be given by the court for the defendant in such action or suit, the said plaintiff shall, by the said judgment, be condemned to pay treble costs.

In actions against special justices, and judgment given in their favour, plaintiff to pay treble costs.

21. And be it further enacted, that if upon any such action or suit such special magistrate shall at any time before final judgment tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred, and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept such amends and costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court, at the trial of such action or suit, that such amends were so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given in the amount so tendered; subject, nevertheless, to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the said defendant: provided always, that no action or suit shall be brought against any such special magistrate in respect of any matter or thing by him done under or in pursuance of this Act, unless the same shall be commenced within six calendar months after the cause of action occurred.

Special justices may tender amends before final judgment for any injury or wrong by them done.

If refused and proved to be sufficient, judgment to be given for the amount so tendered.

Actions against them to be commenced within 6 calendar months.

22. And be it further enacted, that this Act, and every clause, matter and thing herein contained, shall commence and take effect from and after the 31st day of July 1834, and not before.

This Act to take effect from and after 31st July 1834.

23. And be it further enacted, that all special justices shall have authority to hear and decide on every charge preferred by any owner or person entitled to the services of any slave after the 1st day of July next, for neglect of any duty, absence from work, insolent or unruly conduct, or disobedience of any sort to the master's or owner's accustomed authority: provided always, that no owner or owners, agent or person entitled to the services of any slave between the 1st day of July next and the 1st day of August next, shall be deprived of that power of correction and enforcing obedience to their lawful orders, except after complaint made to such special justices at the instance of the said owner or owners, agent or person entitled to any person's services as a slave between the said periods.

Offences committed by slaves after 1st July may be heard and determined by special justices after.

24. And be it further enacted, that the said special justices shall inquire into and decide on every complaint made of any offence committed before the 1st day of August next, but undetected, or from the absence of the party offending, or other sufficient cause, previously unpunished by any other authority; and the said special justices, on conviction of any offender between the 1st day of July next and the 1st day of August next, shall award and direct the infliction of any one or more of the punishments that by any law of this Island shall be directed for the breach of the duties of apprenticed labourers; and all offenders undetected or unpunished before the 1st day of August next, shall be treated as if at the time of their several offences they had been in the condition of apprenticed labourers.

Undetected or unpunished offences committed by them before 1st August to be heard and determined by special justices, and punished as if, at the time the offence was committed, such slaves had been in the condition of apprenticed labourers.

25. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed during this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly.

AN ACT to divide Apprenticed Labourers into several Classes.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient that apprenticed labourers should be divided into distinct classes, as hereinafter mentioned: we, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of St. Christopher, pray Your Most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted and ordained:

Apprenticed labourers divided into 3 classes; viz. prædial attached, prædial unattached, and non-prædial.

1. And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the 31st day of July 1834, all persons then slaves shall be divided into three distinct classes: the first of such classes to consist of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners; the second of such classes to consist of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes to consist of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes: provided always, that no person of the age of 12 years or upwards shall be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall for 12 calendar months at the least next before the 28th day of August 1833, have been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce.

No person of the age of 12 years or upwards to be included in either of the 3 classes of prædials, unless such person shall have been employed in agriculture for 12 months preceding 28th August 1833.

Returns of slaves to be made on 28th July, or within 10 days after. Form of Return (A.)

2. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that on the 20th day of July now next ensuing, or within 10 days after, every owner of any slave or slaves within the said Island shall return unto the registrar of slaves for this Island, a list of the slaves belonging to him, her or them, and which return shall be in the form marked (A.), hereunto annexed; distinguishing, in reference to each slave therein mentioned, to which of the three classes aforesaid such slave belongs; and to which return shall be annexed an affidavit, to be sworn before any justice of the peace, who is hereby required to administer an oath in that behalf without fee or reward, which affidavit shall be to the effect, that the distinctions in the said return made correspond with the occupations usually pursued for 12 months next preceding the date of an Act passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, on the 28th of August 1833, and intituled, "An Act for the abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," by each of the slaves to whom such returns may refer.

Returns may be amended up to 30th August, by inserting the increase and decrease up to 31st July, and the person first in command may extend the time.

3. And be it further enacted, that all and every person and persons making such returns as aforesaid on the said 20th day of July, or within 10 days after, shall and are hereby directed, until the 30th day of August next ensuing, to alter and amend such return, upon oath, to be taken and administered as aforesaid, and also to amend such return, by stating the increase and decrease of the same slaves up to the 31st day of July inclusive, and the registrar of slaves shall receive and record such amendment at any time up to the said 30th day day of August, on which day the said return shall be closed, and no amended return shall be received after that day, unless permission for that purpose shall be granted by the Lieutenant-governor or Commander-in-chief, upon satisfactory proof of any omission or error having undesignedly occurred in any such return.

4. And be it further enacted, that in case the registrar of slaves shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of the return so to be made as aforesaid, he shall and is hereby authorized to appoint a time and place at which such owner, or his or her authorized agent, shall attend him the said registrar to substantiate the accuracy of such return: provided that notice in writing of the appointment of such time and place, for the purpose aforesaid, shall be served on the owner, or his or her attorney, or left at his, her or their usual place of abode, 12 hours at the least before the time appointed for his, her or their attendance.

In case the registrar shall doubt the accuracy of any return, he shall appoint a time and place for the owner to substantiate the same.

5. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said registrar of slaves to proceed to examine on oath the person making such return as aforesaid, and also the slaves respecting whom such doubt has arisen, or, in the absence of either, such other evidence as he may deem necessary and sufficient, and examine on oath any witnesses who may be adduced respecting the truth of such return, and may, if necessary, adjourn any such examination from time to time; and the said registrar is hereby authorized to confirm or correct any such return as he may see fit, and shall, within 24 hours after such confirmation or correction, give notice of his decision to the party making such return, and to the slaves respectively of such his decision.

Registrar in such cases to examine on oath the owner and the slave, and any witnesses touching such return.

Registrar may confirm or correct the return as he may see fit.

6. And be it further enacted, that if either the party making such return, or the slave to whom it may refer, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar, such party may on his own behalf appeal; and the registrar is hereby required, on behalf of the said slave, to appeal to the next Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas to be held within this Island, after such notice of the said registrar's decision aforesaid, by petition, setting forth the nature of such decision and the objections thereto; and the said court are hereby required to proceed in a summary way to hear and decide upon the same, and its decision shall be final and conclusive; and the said court are hereby authorized and required to make all necessary rules for regulating the proceedings upon every such petition, in the manner which may be most conducive to method, punctuality and dispatch.

Should the master or the slave be dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar, appeal may be made to the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas by petition, &c.

7. And be it further enacted, that upon the termination of any such proceedings as aforesaid, there shall be affixed to the entry of the name of such prædial attached slave in the registry of slaves the letters P. A., of each prædial unattached slave the letters P. U., and of each non-prædial slave the letters N. P.

In the entry of the names of the slaves, P. A. to be affixed to prædial attached, P. U. prædial unattached, and N. P. to non-prædial.

8. And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of such labourers as aforesaid, the slave registry, so corrected as aforesaid, shall be deposited and kept in the office of the secretary of this Island among the records of the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas; and should any question arise respecting the class to which any such apprenticed labourer shall belong, such corrected registry, or a certified extract thereof, shall be deemed and taken as conclusive evidence of the fact.

The corrected slave registry to be deposited in the secretary's office, and shall be deemed conclusive in any case of dispute.

9. And be it further enacted, that the registrar of slaves shall, within 30 days after the passing of this Act, deposit the original and triennial returns of slaves (and all other documents in his possession relating thereto) in the office of the secretary of this Island: provided always, that the registrar of slaves shall continue to make copies and extracts, and grant certificates of registration, and receive the usual and lawful fees thereon.

Thirty days after the passing of this Act registrar to deposit the books of original and triennial returns in the secretary's office.

10. And be it further enacted, that in case any person shall make or take any false oath to any matter or thing by this Act prescribed, he or she shall be and is hereby declared to be guilty of the crime of perjury, and be liable to all the pains and penalties by law attaching to the same.

Persons taking false oath declared guilty of perjury.

11. And be it further enacted, that if any person shall neglect or omit to make any return or affidavit by this Act required, or to attend the registrar of slaves when summoned by him for that purpose as aforesaid, such person shall for each and every such neglect or default as aforesaid incur a penalty of not less than 20 s., nor more than 10 l.; and in the event of the wilful absence of any such person so summoned as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed to decide any such question as though such party had attended, and that in case of any such default as aforesaid, and complaint thereof to any justice of the peace, he shall be and is hereby authorized to summon the offender before him; and in case such offender shall fail to obey such summons, or to make sufficient excuse for not making such return or affidavit as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay such sum, not less than 20 s. nor more than 10 l. as aforesaid, to be recovered by warrant under the hand and seal of such justice of the peace, and to be executed by such constable as the same shall be directed to, according to the exigency of such warrant, which shall be in the form following:

Persons neglecting to make their returns, or to obey the summons of the registrar, to forfeit not less than 20 s., nor more than 10 l., to be recovered by warrant under the hand and seal of any justice of the peace.

To (A. B.) or to any other Constable of the said Island.

Form of warrant.

Whereas C. D. hath neglected to make the return or affidavit required by a certain Act, intituled, "An Act to divide Apprenticed Labourers into several Classes," or to attend the registrar of slaves, being lawfully summoned for that purpose under and by virtue of a certain Act intituled, "An Act to divide Apprenticed Labourers into several Classes," (as the case may be) you are therefore hereby required to levy the sum of current money of this Island, on the goods and chattels of the said *C. AN ACT to provide for Apprenticed Labourers during the term of their Apprenticeship.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is necessary to make provision for the due care and maintenance of apprenticed labourers during the term of their apprenticeship: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Christopher, pray Your Most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained:

Various clauses of an Act of this Island, intituled, "An Act more effectually to provide for the Support, and to extend certain regulations for the Protection of Slaves, to promote and encourage their Increase, and generally to meliorate their Condition," declared to be in force.

1. And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the 31st day of July, in the present year 1834, the several clauses hereinafter enumerated of an Act of the Commander-in-chief of the Leeward Caribbee Islands in America, and the General Council and the General Assembly of the said Islands, intituled "An Act more effectually to provide for the Support, and to extend certain Regulations for the Protection of Slaves; to promote and encourage their Increase, and generally to meliorate their Condition," shall be, and the same are hereby declared to be in force, and applicable for the protection and benefit of all and every person and persons who shall become apprenticed labourer and labourers within this Island, on the 1st day of August next, so long as he, she and they respectively shall continue in such state of apprenticeship: that is to say, Clause the first; so much of Clause the second, as applies to this Island; Clause the sixth; Clause the seventh; Clause the nineteenth; Clause the twenty-seventh; Clause the twenty-eighth, with the exception of the word "white," when and as often as the same shall occur therein; Clause the twenty-ninth; Clause the thirtieth, with exception as above; Clause the thirty-first; Clause the thirty-fourth; and Clause the forty-ninth.

Allowances to labourers may be commuted with the sanction of the special justices.

2. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any employer within this Island, with the sanction of the special justice of the district in which such employer shall reside, to make any bargain or agreement with any labourer for a commutation of the allowances of provisions and clothing, or either of them, by this law required to be furnished to such labourer.

While abourers are receiving food and nutriment under the direction of the medical attendant, employers not to be compelled to furnish the weekly allowance.

3. And be it further enacted, that while any apprenticed labourer or labourers shall be receiving from his, her or their master, manager or director, food and nutriment under the orders and direction of any medical practitioner in attendance on such labourer or labourers, such master, manager or director shall not be compelled or compellable to furnish any such labourer or labourers with the quantum of weekly food hereby required to be supplied to such labourer and labourers.

Certificate of medical attendant to be received in evidence of any

4. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any special justice who is hereby authorized to inquire into any offence against this Act, in his discretion to receive and and take in evidence touching any such offence, the certificate of any medical practitioner, under his hand, of any matter or thing appertaining or relating to such offence. — breach of the provisions of this Act.

5. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every penalty and forfeiture imposed under and by virtue of this Act, shall be recovered by warrant under the hand and seal of the special justice of the district in which such offence shall be committed; such warrant to be directed to and executed by some constable or police officer within the said district, who is hereby authorized to levy the same on the goods and chattels of every person or persons offending against this Act, and who shall be convicted thereof before such justice, and shall bring the same to sale within 10 days after such levy, and for want of such goods and chattels, such offender shall be committed to the common gaol of this Island for any time not exceeding three months, at the discretion of such justice; and all such penalties shall be applied to the use of the public of this Island, and be paid into the treasury thereof: provided nevertheless, that every person so convicted may appeal to the next superior court of criminal jurisdiction, if he or she conceives himself or herself aggrieved. — Penalties how to be recovered. — Appeal allowed from the sentence of special justices.

6. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly. — This Act may be altered during the present session.

AN ACT for prescribing the Duties, and regulating the Conduct of Apprenticed Labourers within this Island. — No. 28.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define by law the duties of apprenticed labourers within this Island, and to prevent any unruly conduct or any insolent language in such apprenticed labourers towards the persons entitled to their services, and to establish rules for the conduct of such apprenticed labourers: We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and Council of the Island of St. Christopher, together with the Assembly of the same, humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained, — Preamble.

1. And it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, every person who shall have become a prædial apprenticed labourer by force of the laws in such case made and provided, shall be bound and compellable by law, for and during the continuance of their apprenticeship, to work on the estate of the person or persons entitled to his or her services for the space of 45 hours in each week, and no longer, during the term of his or her apprenticeship: provided, that no such prædial apprenticed labourer shall be liable to perform any labour whatever on any Sunday during the term of his or her apprenticeship, except in watching and protecting the property of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, or in tending, protecting and feeding the stock of the same, or in other works of necessity. — Prædial apprenticed labourers to work for their employers 45 hours in each week. — Not to be compelled to labour on Sunday, except in works of necessity.

2. And be it further enacted, that every person who shall have become a non-prædial apprenticed labourer by force of the laws aforesaid, shall be bound and compellable by law, during the continuance of such apprenticeship, to do for the person or persons entitled to his or her services, all such work as they have hitherto been accustomed to do, or as free hired servants are accustomed and ought to do for the person to whom they hire their services; and every such apprenticed non-prædial labourer shall be bound to do so much of all such works for the persons entitled to his or her services as such free hired servants are accustomed and ought to do for the persons to whom they hire their services: and the special magistrates of this Island shall, in every case where any dispute shall arise as to the quality or quantity of the work to be done by any non-prædial apprenticed labourer for the person or persons entitled to his or her services, judge and determine whether any such work is, both in quality and quantity, such work as ought to be performed by non-prædial apprenticed labourers, according to the provisions of this Act: provided, that no non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall be liable to perform any labour whatever on any Sunday during the term of his or her apprenticeship, except in the protection of property usually confided to his, her or their care, and in other works of necessity, and in domestic services. — Non-prædials to perform the same services they were accustomed to as slaves. — Special magistrates to determine, in cases of dispute, whether the work required of non-prædials be such as they ought to perform. — Proviso respecting labour on Sunday.

Prædial labourers to conform to all the rules laid down for the good government of the estate on which they reside.

3. And it is hereby further enacted, that every prædial apprenticed labourer shall be bound and compellable by law to conform himself or herself at all times to all the rules laid down by any person or persons having the control or management of the estate on which such apprenticed labourer may be employed, for the good government of such estate: provided, that such rules do not militate in any respect against this or any other Act of this Island.

The same rules to apply to labourers occasionally employed on estates.

4. And it is hereby further enacted, that every prædial apprenticed labourer who shall come at certain times to do certain work on the estate of any employer or employers, or shall occasionally be or reside on any such estate, shall be bound and compellable by law, during the performance of such work, on going to and returning from the same, and during such occasional residence, to conform himself or herself to all the lawful rules laid down as aforesaid for the control and direction of such apprenticed labourer by such employer or employers.

Non-prædials to conform to the rules laid down for them.

5. And it is hereby further enacted, that every non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall conform himself or herself at all times to all such rules as shall be lawfully laid down as aforesaid, by the person or persons entitled to his or her services, or by any person acting under the authority of such person or persons.

Punishment for offences committed by apprenticed labourers.

6. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall offend against any of the hereinbefore recited clauses of this Act, such apprenticed labourer, on conviction of the same before any special magistrate, shall be liable to any of the hereinafter mentioned punishments, or any part thereof, according to the discretion of the said special magistrate, subject to all the rules hereinafter prescribed for the infliction of punishments on apprenticed labourers.

Apprenticed labourers residing on estates without being bound to labour, to conform to all the rules laid down for labourers.

7. And it is hereby further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer who may reside on the estate of any person or persons whatever, without being bound to perform any work whatever in the service of such person or persons, shall conform himself or herself to all such rules as shall be lawfully laid down as aforesaid by such person or persons, or by any person appointed by such person or persons, for the management and direction of such estate.

Apprenticed labourers absent for 1 hour, or any part of an hour, to serve 2 extra hours, or double the time of absence.

8. And for avoiding all doubts as to what shall be deemed improper conduct in any apprenticed labourer, it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall for one hour, or any part of an hour, absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer without reasonable cause, he or she shall be compelled for every such offence, on conviction of the same before the special magistrate of the district in which such labourer shall reside, to serve two extra hours, or double the time of absence in the service of such employer: provided, that such extra hours shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week; and provided also, that if such extra labour shall not have been performed in any one week for such absence, it shall be made in any subseqent week or weeks; and provided always nevertheless, that no such period of extra labour shall extend to compel such apprenticed labourer to labour in the service of any employer beyond the period of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such labourer.

Provided such extra hours do not exceed 15 in any one week.

Such extra service not to extend beyond 7 years after expiration of apprenticeship.

For absence for more than 7½ hours in any one week, labourer to be adjudged a deserter, and confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding 1 week; and if a male, to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 15 with a cat, according to the discretion of the special magistrate.

9. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself for more than seven hours and a half in any one week from the service of his or her employer, without reasonable cause, he or she shall, on conviction of the same before a special magistrate of this Island, be adjudged a deserter, and as such shall be confined to hard labour in any house of correction or place of confinement by this or any other Act to be appointed in this Island, for any time not exceeding one week, according to the discretion of the said special magistrate; and in case such offender should be a male, then such male apprenticed labourer shall receive any number of stripes, not exceeding 15, with a cat-of-nine-tails, according to the discretion of the said special magistrate.

For absence for 2 days in any one week, labourer to be adjudged a vagabond, and confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding 2 weeks; or if a male, shall receive any number of stripes not exceeding 15.

10. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself for two days during one week from the service of his or her employer, without reasonable cause, he or she shall, on conviction of the same before a special magistrate of this Island, be adjudged a vagabond, and as such shall be confined to hard labour in any house of correction or place of confinement in this Island, for any time not exceeding two weeks, according to the discretion of the said special magistrate; or in case such offender should be a male apprenticed labourer, then such male apprenticed labourer shall receive any number of stripes, not exceeding 15, with a cat-of-nine-tails, according to the discretion of the said special magistrate.

For absence for 6 days in any one week, labourer to be adjudged a runaway, and confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding 1 month; or if a male, to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 30; and in addition thereto shall make satisfaction for the absent time, and for the time employed in hard labour, unless such labour shall be performed on the estate for the benefit of the employer.

11. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself for six days in any one week from the service of his or her employer, without reasonable cause, he or she shall, on conviction of the same before any special magistrate of this Island, be adjudged a runaway, and as such shall be confined to hard labour in any house of correction or place of confinement in this Island, for any time not exceeding one month, according to the discretion of the said special magistrate; or in case such offender should be a male apprenticed labourer, then such apprenticed labourer shall receive any number of stripes, not exceeding 30, with a cat-of-nine-tails, according to the discretion of the said special magistrate: provided always, that every such offender shall (in addition to such punishment) be bound to make satisfaction to his or her employer for the time he or she shall have been absent from such employer (and also for the time such apprenticed labourer shall or may be employed in hard labour as aforesaid), unless such hard labour shall be, be, by the sentence of the said special magistrate, performed on the estate of, and for the benefit of the employer of such apprenticed labourer.

Special magistrates to decide whether labourers assign reasonable cause for their absence.

12. And it is hereby further enacted, that in all cases where any apprenticed labourer, charged with any of the three last-mentioned offences, shall assign any cause as a reasonable cause for the offence with which he is charged, and the employer of such apprenticed labourer shall deny that such cause is a reasonable cause for the said absence, the special magistrate before whom such apprenticed labourer shall be examined on such charge shall judge and determine whether such alleged cause be reasonable or not.

Labourers performing their work in an indolent, careless or negligent manner to be adjudged to labour for the employer not exceeding 15 hours in any week, for the first offence of that nature.

For the second like offence, labourer to be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding 1 week.

For the third like offence, labourer to be confined for any time not exceeding 1 fortnight, or if a male, shall receive any number of stripes not exceeding 20.

13. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted before a special magistrate of this Island, of having performed the work committed to him or her by his or her employer in an indolent, careless or negligent manner, he or she shall, on conviction of such offence before such magistrate, be adjudged to labour in the service of his or her employer for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week, according to the discretion of such magistrate, for the first time when the said apprenticed labourer shall be convicted of such offence. And it is hereby further enacted, that for the second time when any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted before a special magistrate of such last-mentioned offence, he or she shall be adjudged to confinement with hard labour in any house of correction or place of confinement in this Island, for any time not exceeding one week, according to the discretion of such special magistrate. And it is hereby further enacted, that for the third or any subsequent occasion when any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted before a special magistrate of such last-mentioned offence, he or she shall be adjudged to confinement with hard labour in any house of correction or place of confinement in this Island, for any time not exceeding one fortnight, according to the discretion of such special magistrate; or in case such offender should be a male apprenticed labourer, then such male apprenticed labourer shall receive any number of stripes, not exceeding 20, with a cat-of-nine-tails, according to the discretion of such special magistrate.

Labourers, by the careless use of fire, injuring property, or who shall ill-treat the cattle or other live stock of any employer, or shall by negligence expose his or her property to any damage or injury, to be compelled to do extra labour for any time not exceeding 15 hours in any 1 week, or to confinement with hard labour not exceeding 1 month, or if a male, to receive any number not exceeding 30 stripes with a cat-of-nine-tails.

And special justices may adjudge any such offender to suffer any 2 or more of the said punishments, if he shall think proper so to do.

14. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, by the careless use of fire, endanger, injure or destroy the property of his or her employer, or of any other person, or shall wantonly injure the property of his or her employer entrusted to his or her care, or shall wantonly injure the property of any person whatever, or shall ill-use the cattle or other live stock of his or her employer, or shall by negligence expose his or her employer's property to any damage or injury, such apprenticed labourer shall, on conviction of any of the above-mentioned offences before any special magistrate, be adjudged to do extra labour in the service of his or her employer for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week, according to the discretion of such magistrate, or shall be adjudged to confinement with hard labour in any house of correction or place of confinement in this Island, for any time not exceeding one month, according to the discretion of such magistrate; or in case such offender should be a male apprenticed labourer, then such male apprenticed labourer shall receive any number of stripes, not exceeding 30, with a cat-of-nine-tails, according to the discretion of such magistrate; and any special magistrate before whom any apprenticed labourer shall have been convicted of any of the offences in this present clause of this Act mentioned, shall and may adjudge such apprenticed labourer to suffer any two or more of the said last-mentioned punishments, if it shall appear to him proper to do so.

For contumacious disobedience, labourer to suffer any 1 or more of the last-mentioned punishments, according to the discretion of the special justice.

15. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his or her employer, such apprenticed labourer shall, on conviction of such contumacious disobedience before any special magistrate, be adjudged to suffer any one or more of the punishments last mentioned, according to the discretion of the said magistrate.

Neglect to perform work on pretence of any feigned sickness, to be sentenced to solitary confinement for any time not exceeding 24 hours, during the time allowed to any such labourer for his own enjoyment, on the information of a medical practitioner that such labourer is able to work; and if a male, to any number of stripes not exceeding 30, in addition to such confinement.

16. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall neglect to perform his or her lawful work, business and employment, on pretence of any feigned sickness, malady or disability, it shall be lawful for any special magistrate having jurisdiction in the premises, on the information of a medical practitioner that such person is able to work, to sentence any such apprenticed labourer to solitary confinement on the estate on which such apprenticed labourer may be employed, or in any other place to be appointed by such special justice, for any period not exceeding 24 hours in and during the time by law allowed to such apprenticed labourer for his or her own use and enjoyment; and in case of such offender being a male, such male offender may, in addition to such solitary confinement, be flogged with any number of stripes, with a cat-of-nine-tails, not exceeding 30, at the discretion of the said special magistrate.

Any 3 or more labourers agreeing together to make resistance to the lawful commands of their employers, or who shall be combined in open resistance to such commands, shall suffer confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding 6 months; and if males, to receive any number not exceeding 30 stripes.

17. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employers or directors, or of any one of the same, or shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, such three or more apprenticed labourers, on conviction of such agreement, or of such combined and open resistance, before any special magistrate, shall be adjudged to be confined with hard labour, in any house of correction or place of confinement in this Island, for any period not exceeding six months, according to the discretion of such magistrate; and in all cases where such offenders shall be male apprenticed labourers, then such apprenticed labourers shall receive any number of stripes, not exceeding 39, with a cat-of-nine-tails, according to the discretion of such magistrate.

For drunkenness, fighting or riotous conduct, &c.

18. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall be found in a state of drunkenness, or fighting, or conducting himself or herself in a riotous manner, or behaving insolently towards his or her employer or director, or towards any person appointed by his or her employer to superintend the conduct of such apprenticed labourer, or shall use insolent language towards any person whatsoever, then such apprenticed labourer, on conviction of any of the said last-mentioned offences before any special magistrate, shall be adjudged to be confined with hard labour in any house of correction or place of confinement in this Island, for any time not exceeding one week, according to the discretion of such magistrate; or if such offender should be a male apprenticed labourer, he may be adjudged to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 15, with a cat-of-nine-tails, according to the discretion of such magistrate.

Labourer to be confined 1 week, or if a male, to any number of stripes not exceeding 15.

In all cases where whipping is directed to be inflicted on male labourers, the punishment for females to be confinement in the stocks, with a distinguishing dress or badge of infamy, for like offences, and in proportion to the quantity of whipping inflicted on males.

Females not to be kept in stocks after sunset or before sunrise, nor for more than 8 hours in any 1 day, nor for more than 6 days for any 1 offence, or for more than 2 days consecutively.

19. And whereas it has been deemed inexpedient to punish female apprenticed labourers by whipping for any offence by them committed: Now, therefore, be it further enacted, that in all cases in which the punishment of whipping is directed by any clauses of this Act to be inflicted upon male apprenticed labourers for any offences by them committed, the punishment of confinement in the stocks, with a distinguishing dress or badge of infamy, shall be inflicted upon female apprenticed labourers when convicted of the same offences, according to the discretion of the special magistrate before whom such female apprenticed labourers shall be convicted, and in proportion to the quantity of such whipping directed to be inflicted upon male apprenticed labourers for such offences respectively: provided, that no female apprenticed labourer shall for any offence whatever be put or kept in the stocks after sunset or before sunrise, or shall be confined in the same for more than eight hours in the whole for any one day, or shall be confined for more than six days for any one offence, or shall be confined more than two days consecutively for any offence, or under any circumstances whatsoever.

All stocks to be according to 1 general model.

20. And it is hereby further enacted, that all stocks to be employed for the purpose of punishing female apprenticed labourers, shall be made according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the officer administering the government in this Colony.

Persons who shall by threats, intimidation, reward, or by any other means whatever, seduce or attempt to seduce any labourer from the service of his or her employer, or shall attempt to persuade any such labourer to neglect his work, or shall knowingly shelter any labourer who may have absconded, or left any work unfinished, shall pay a fine not exceeding 20*l.*, or suffer imprisonment not exceeding 3 months.

Should such offender be himself an apprenticed labourer, he shall undergo any 1 or more of the punishments specified in this Act for any other breach of its provisions.

21. And it is hereby further enacted, that if any person or persons shall by any threat or intimidation, reward, or promise of reward, or by any means of influence whatever, seduce, or attempt to seduce any apprenticed labourer from the performance of those services he or she legally owes to his or her employer; or shall persuade, or attempt to persuade any apprenticed labourer to neglect or not to finish any piece or contract work undertaken by such apprentice; or shall knowingly shelter or suffer to be sheltered on his or her premises, any apprenticed labourer who shall have absconded from his or her master's or mistress's service, or who shall have left unfinished any work contracted to be done by such apprentice, such person shall, on conviction before any special justice of the peace, be compelled to pay a fine not exceeding 20*l.*, and in default of payment of the same immediately, or within such time as the said special justice shall appoint at the time of conviction, be committed to the common gaol or other place of confinement in this Island, for any period not exceeding three months; and if such person so offending against this Act, shall himself or herself be an apprenticed labourer, he or she shall, on conviction before any special justice as aforesaid, be sentenced to undergo any one or more of the punishments specified in this Act for any other breach of the provisions of the same: provided always, that nothing in this clause shall extend to prevent or restrain in any way the power of every apprenticed labourer, at those times when he is not compellable to work for his master or mistress, to choose his or her own employer, as well as the service he or she may be willing to undertake.

Apprenticed labourers may choose their own employers at such times as they are not compellable to work for their master or mistress.

No apprenticed labourer to use or have in possession any gunpowder, fire-arms, &c., unless with the knowledge of the employer or director, who have authority to seize such arms, &c.

22. And it is hereby further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer to keep, use, or have in his or her possession any gunpowder or fire-arms of any description, swords or other offensive weapon, unless with the knowledge and consent of his or her employer or director; and that it shall be lawful for any such employer or director to seize and retain to his own use any gunpowder and fire-arms of any description, swords or other offensive weapons, which any such apprenticed labourer may have in his or her possession without such knowledge and consent as aforesaid.

Majority of labourers on any plantation agreeing to perform extra or task-work, such agreement to be binding on the rest.

23. And it is hereby further enacted, that in cases where the majority of the apprenticed labourers on any plantation shall agree, in conformity with law, to any task or extra work for any employer in the said Island, such contract and agreement for such task or extra work shall be binding on the rest and remainder of the said apprenticed labourers on such plantation.

Persons aggrieved by apprenticed labourers may seek their remedy either according to the general laws of this Island, or according to the provisions of this Act;

But not allowed to proceed under both the laws.

24. And it is hereby further enacted, that wherever any apprenticed labourer shall be amenable to the general laws of this Island for any of the offences in this Act mentioned, the person or persons aggrieved by such apprenticed labourers may seek their remedy against such apprenticed labourers either according to the general laws of this Island, or according to the provisions of this Act: provided always, that it shall in no case be competent to any person aggrieved by the misconduct of any apprenticed labourer, to proceed against such apprenticed labourer both according to the general law of this Island and according to the provisions of this Act, for the same offenee.

25. And

25. And it is hereby further enacted, that in all cases of urgent necessity, it shall be lawful for the owner or other person in management of any plantation or property in this Island, where such necessity shall exist, to require and exact, as long as the necessity may exist, the service of all or any of the apprenticed labourers on such his or her plantation or property; and every apprenticed labourer refusing to comply with such requisition, shall be liable, on conviction of the same before any special magistrate, to suffer any one or more of the punishments in this Act mentioned for breach of the duties of apprenticed labourers.

In cases of urgent necessity, directors of estates may require the service of all the apprenticed labourers during such necessity. Punishment of labourers refusing to comply.

26. And it is hereby further enacted, that no such apprenticed labourer shall, during the continuance of such their apprenticeship, be liable to be arrested or imprisoned for debt, or be liable to be called on, or be competent to serve in the militia of this Island, or to serve as a juror.

No apprenticed labourer to be imprisoned for debt, or to perform any public duty.

27. And it is hereby further enacted, that all such apprenticed labourers shall during the term of such their apprenticeship be, and they are hereby disqualified from being elected members of Assembly, or churchwardens, or coroners, or vestrymen, or of voting at any election for any of the offices aforesaid, or being appointed justices of the peace.

Not to serve in the Assembly, &c. &c.

28. And it is hereby further enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly.

This Act may be altered during the present session.

AN ACT to prescribe the Duties to be performed by Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and to enforce the performance of the same. No. 29.

WHEREAS it is necessary to establish certain rules and regulations to prescribe the conduct of employers towards their apprenticed labourers, and to compel the observance of the same by fit and proper penalties to be enforced as hereinafter shall be provided: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of St. Christopher, pray Your most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted and ordained, Preamble.

1. And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that if any employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall by force or fraud protract the weekly services of such labourer beyond the period by law allowed for that purpose, he shall forfeit for the benefit of such labourer, the sum of 1*s.* in respect of every hour which such service shall be protracted. Penalty on employer for compelling labour beyond the period prescribed by law.

2. And it is further enacted, that it shall be the duty of every such employer to intimate to the labourers in his or her employment, by sounding of a bell, or other sufficient signal, the commencement and the close of the legal hours of labour, which signal shall always be of a nature to be distinctly visible or audible to the several prædial apprenticed labourers in the service of any such employer. The commencement and close of labour to be intimated by signal.

3. And it is further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be bound to undertake any task work, except with his or her own free assent to the same, save as hereinafter excepted. Labourers not compellable to undertake task work without their own consent.

4. And it is further enacted, that every contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of specific work as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall by such employer be reduced into writing, and entered into a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation, which book it shall be the duty of the special justice of the district to inspect, as often as he shall by law be required to repair to the several plantations within his district. Contracts for task work to be in writing, and entered in a book for the inspection of the special magistrate.

Such contracts not to be binding for more than 30 days, unless entered into in the presence of and with the approbation of the special justice.

5. And be it further enacted, that no contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer for the performance of any specific or task work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure or continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of 30 days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties in the presence and with the approbation of such special justice of the peace, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him before the expiration of such 30 days; and every such approbation of every such contract shall by such special justice be attested under his hand in the book so to be kept as aforesaid; and the said special justice shall, before approving any such contract, ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same, and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust; and that in every such contract for task work, or for extra service extending beyond the period of 30 days, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the compensation to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying or giving such compensation, shall be distinctly expressed: provided always, that no contract for such extra service as aforesaid, shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

Contracts for task work not to continue longer than 1 year.

Execution to issue against employer for non-payment of compensation for task work or extra labour.

6. And be it further enacted, that upon due proof being given to the satisfaction of such special justice, of the non-payment of or failure to render or perform the compensation stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task work or for extra services, it shall be competent for such justice, and he is hereby authorized to award execution against any such employer for the amount or value of such compensation; and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such award, to cause the same execution to be levied as hereinafter mentioned, on the produce, goods and chattels of every such employer, save and except articles and stock employed and used in his or her trade or business of husbandry; and which execution shall be in the form following:

Form of execution.

St. Christopher.

WILLIAM the FOURTH, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King:

To any Special Constable within the said Island.

Whereas A. B. stands convicted before me of a failure to perform the conditions stipulated for by him with C. D. an apprenticed labourer, for the work and labour of such apprenticed labourer, and the said A. B. hath been awarded to pay the sum of l. for such failure as aforesaid, and the said A. B. not having paid the same within the time limited for that purpose, you are required and authorized to levy this execution on the produce, goods and chattels of the said A. B., save and except articles and stock employed and used in the trade or business of husbandry of the said A. B., sufficient to pay and satisfy the said sum of l.; and the produce, goods and chattels so levied on as aforesaid, you are to take into your custody and them safely to keep, unless the said A. B. shall give a good bond, in which he shall procure one sufficient surety to join, to deliver the produce, goods and chattels levied on as aforesaid, on the day of sale, and which sale you hereby are required to make on the sixth day after such levy as aforesaid at the nearest town, and apply the proceeds thereof to the payment of the said sum of l.; and you are hereby required to return the overplus of such sale, if any, to the said A. B.

Witness my hand and seal, this day of .

Execution to be levied by special constables on goods, chattels and produce, save and except articles and stock employed and used in husbandry.

7. And be it further enacted, that such execution as aforesaid shall be levied and executed by any special constable of the district wherein the same shall issue, to whom the said special justice shall direct the same, and such special constable shall thereunder seize and sell so much of the produce, goods and chattels of such employer as aforesaid, save and except articles and stock employed and used in his or her trade or business of husbandry, as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, and the surplus of such sale shall be forthwith delivered over to such employer: provided always, that no such sale shall take place as aforesaid without 48 hours previous notice in writing made and given to the said employer, either by personal service on him or her, or by leaving the same at his or her place of abode, of such sale, and the time and place thereof, such notice to be made and given by such special justice as aforesaid.

Forty-eight hours notice of sale to be given to the employer.

Labourers violating the terms of contract to be liable to the same pains and penalties as for non-performance of the duties owing to the employer.

8. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall violate the terms of such contract as aforesaid, for task work or for extra service, he or she shall be liable to the same penalties and pains as are by law provided in respect of the violation by such labourer of the duties to be by him or her performed in the discharge of the services owing by him or her by law to such his or her employer.

Children not having attained the age of 6 years on the 1st August 1834, or who may be born after that day, may under certain circumstances be apprenticed out.

9. And whereas it may happen that children who have not attained the age of six years on the said 1st day of August 1834, or that children who after that day may be born to any female apprenticed labourers, may not be properly supported by their parents, and that no other person may be disposed voluntarily to undertake the support of such children; and it is necessary that provision should be made for the maintenance of such children in any such contingency; Be it therefore enacted, that if any child who on the said 1st day of August 1834 had not completed his or her sixth year, or if any child to which any female apprenticed labourer may give birth on or after the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be brought before any justice of the peace holding any special commission, and if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of such justice that any such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, maintenance, and that such child hath not completed his or her age of 12 years, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother; but in case it shall be made to appear to any such justice that any such person or persons aforesaid is or are unable, unwilling or unfit to enter into such indentures, and properly to perform the conditions thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required by such indenture to bind any such child to any person or persons to be by him for that purpose approved, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and it shall by every such indenture of apprenticeship be declared in what capacity such child is apprenticed, whether as an agricultural labourer or house servant, or tradesman, and such master and apprentice shall in relation to each other be bound by the laws of England applicable to master and apprentice, as far as the same are in force in this Island, and such apprenticeship shall not extend beyond the 21st year of such apprentice's age.

Married women and children of 12 years and upwards competent to enter into contracts for task work or extra labour.
Parents, guardians, &c. may enter into contracts for task work for children under 12 years.

10. And be it further enacted, that every married woman being such apprentice as aforesaid, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his or her infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contract as aforesaid for task work or for extra service; and it shall be lawful for any mother, guardian or other person standing in the place of parent, to enter into such contract as aforesaid for task work or for extra service, for and on behalf of any child under the age of 12 years, with reference to whom any such person entering into such contract as aforesaid may stand in the situation of mother, guardian or parent.

Punishment of employers for ill-treating labourers.

11. And be it further enacted, that if any employer of any apprenticed labourer shall whip, beat, imprison, confine in the stocks, or otherwise maltreat such apprenticed labourer, or shall by way of punishment commit any violence upon his or her person, such employer shall incur a penalty to be imposed by such special justice as aforesaid not exceeding 5 l., with imprisonment not exceeding 14 days in default of the payment of such fine: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any employer from confining any labourer for safe custody until such labourer can be delivered over to some policeman or constable, in order to secure his or her attendance before the special justice.

Labourers may maintain civil actions or suits against employers for ill-usage, instead of applying to the special magistrate.
Special justice may commit offenders for trial before any court having competent jurisdiction.
On conviction of employers for twice inflicting corporal punishment, or of any violence on the person of the labourer, such labourer may be transferred to another employer, and the amount received for the services be paid into the public treasury.
And the court may punish such offender by fine not exceeding 20 l., and in default of payment, by imprisonment not exceeding 1 month.

12. And be it further enacted, that it shall be competent for any apprenticed labourer, in any such case of whipping, beating, imprisoning, confining in stocks or other maltreatment, or of violence committed on his or her person by way of punishment as aforesaid, instead of preferring his or her complaint to such special justice, to maintain any civil suit or action, as in the case of any other free person, for damages for such offences; and it shall also be competent to such special justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit the offender to take his or her trial for such offence before any court having jurisdiction in the premises; and if any such employer shall be convicted before any court of competent jurisdiction of any cruelty towards his or her apprenticed labourer, or if any such employer be twice convicted of inflicting any corporal punishment, or of any violence upon the person of such labourer, then the labourer shall at his or her instance be transferred to another employer, under the direction of the said court, and the sum received for the services of such labourer shall be paid into the public treasury of this Island, to be applied to the use of the same; and it shall and may be lawful for such court to punish such offending employer by fine not exceeding the sum of 20 l., and in default of payment thereof, by imprisonment in the common gaol of this Island for any term not exceeding one month, at the discretion of the said court: provided always, that no master or employer of apprenticed labourer shall be amenable to any special justice for any act done in defence of his person or property, for which he would not be equally amenable to any justice of the general commission of the peace, if the said act had been committed towards any person not in the condition of an apprenticed labourer.

No fine to be imposed by special justices unless 24 hours notice be given to party of the justice's intention to investigate the complaint.

13. And be it further enacted, that none of the pains and penalties which any special justice is hereby authorized to award shall be imposed in any case unless due notice in writing shall be personally served on or left at the place of abode of the offender, of the justice's intention to proceed to inquire into the complaint against such offender, and which notice shall express the time and place of hearing such complaint, the nature of the said complaint, and by whom preferred, and shall be signed by such special justice, and be served at the least 24 hours before the hearing of such complaint, and the evidence touching such complaint shall be taken at the time and place mentioned in the said notice.

This Act may be altered during the present session.

14. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed during this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly.

Passed the Assembly, this 17th day of July 1834.

Appendix (B.)

Colonial Laws. No. 30.

St. Christopher.

AN ACT to regulate the removal of Prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another; to establish certain Rules to govern the Sale of the Services of all Classes of Apprenticed Labourers, and the disposition thereof by Will, as well as to regulate the Descent of the same in cases of Intestacy.

Preamble.

WE, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of the Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Christopher, do pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained, Apprenticed labourers not to be removed from the Island.

1. And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that no apprenticed labourer shall be subject or liable to be removed from this Island to any place whatsoever, save and except in his ordinary business upon the high seas, or otherwise, as a fisherman or mariner.

Prædial apprentices not to be employed in any labour except the usual business of the plantation.

Their services may be transferred, under certain restrictions, from one plantation to another belonging to the same employer.

2. And be it further enacted, that no prædial apprenticed labourer who, under and by virtue of any law, may become attached to the soil, shall be subject or liable to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, except upon or in or about the works and business of the plantation or estates to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have been attached, or on which he or she shall have been usually employed previously to the 1st day of August 1834: provided nevertheless, that, with the consent in writing of any one or more justices of the peace holding such special commission as specially provided for in and by a certain Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it shall be lawful for the person or persons entitled to the services of any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers, to transfer his or their services to any other estate or plantation within this Island to such person or persons belonging, which written consent shall in no case be given or be of any validity, unless such justice of the peace shall first have ascertained that such transfer would not have the effect of separating any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer from his or her lawful wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to such apprenticed labourer, at the time living on the said estate together with such person in such reputed relationship: provided always, that such reputed husband and wife shall be interpreted to mean only one such reputed husband or wife as any apprenticed labourer shall for 12 months then next preceding have cohabited with under appearance of marriage, and shall at the time of such intended removal be actually cohabiting with and treating as husband or wife, and that such transfer would not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of such attached prædial apprenticed labourer; such consent in writing of such justice of the peace as aforesaid to be recorded in the book of proceedings which is by law required to be kept by the said special justice.

Services of apprentices to be deemed a chattel interest, be transferable by bargain and sale, &c., and be distributable in cases of intestacy.

Husband and wife, parent and child, not to be separated.

Prædial labourers not to be removed from the soil to which they are attached, without the written consent of one or more special justices.

Services of prædial labourers not to be sold under execution except with the soil to which they be attached.

3. And be it further enacted and declared, that the right and interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any apprenticed labourer shall be deemed and taken to be a chattel interest, and of the nature of personal estate, and shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, gift, contract and conveyance, and will, and be distributable, in case the person or persons entitled to such services shall depart this life intestate, in the like and same manner as chattel interest or personal estate: provided always, that no apprenticed labourer shall, by virtue of any such bargain and sale, gift, contract and conveyance, or will or descent, in case of intestacy, be subject or liable to be separated from his or her lawful wife or husband, or parent or child; nor shall any prædial apprenticed labourer, under and by virtue of any bargain and sale, gift, contract and conveyance, or will or descent, in case of intestacy, be removed from the soil to which he or she shall be attached, or on which he or she shall have been usually employed, without the consent in writing of any one or more justices of the peace holding such special commission as hereinbefore mentioned, such consent to be recorded as aforesaid: and provided further, that no such apprenticed labourer or labourers, or the right of the employer or employers to the services thereof, shall be the subject of any writ of attachment, sequestration or execution, save and except in case of any prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers attached to the soil, in which case he, she or they may be levied on and sold together with the soil to which he, she or they may be so attached as aforesaid, but not otherwise.

4. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed during this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly.

AN ACT for dividing this Island into Districts, and for establishing a sufficient Police within the same.

WHEREAS it is necessary to divide this Island into certain districts, for the more convenient exercise of the authority of certain special magistrates to be appointed for this Island in pursuance of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the 3d & 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves:" And whereas it is also necessary that a sufficient police should be established in the said several districts: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of St. Christopher, do pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained, Preamble.

1. And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, that from and after the passing of this Act, this Island shall be divided into four districts, for the purposes of the jurisdiction of such special magistrates. And it is hereby further enacted, that the first of the said districts shall include and comprise the several parishes of St. George, Basseterre, St. Peter, Basseterre, and Trinity, Palmetto Point; and the second of the said districts shall include and comprise the several parishes of St. Mary, Cayon and Christchurch, Nichola Town; and the third of the said districts shall include and comprise the several parishes of St. John, Capisterre, and St. Paul, Capisterre; and the fourth of the said districts shall include and comprise the parishes of St. Ann, Sandy Point, and St. Thomas, Middle Island. The Island divided into 4 districts. Parishes comprised in each district.

2. And it is hereby further enacted, that each one of the above-mentioned districts shall be assigned to one or more special magistrates, as the proper and peculiar district in which such special magistrate or magistrates shall perform the duties prescribed to special magistrates: provided, that every special magistrate shall reside within the district to which he is appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause to be allowed by the person first in command in this Island. Each district to be assigned to one or more special magistrates, who shall reside within the same.

3. And it is hereby further enacted, that in each of the above-mentioned districts there shall be provided for the use of the special magistrate of such district a convenient and sufficient justice-room, wherein such special magistrate shall sit, as by law directed, for the purpose of administering the laws relating to the apprenticed labourers of this Island; and that in three of the said districts there shall be formed a police establishment, and a place of confinement or house of correction, and for that purpose the officer administering the government of this Colony is hereby authorized to appropriate any waste lands of the Crown that may be conveniently situated; and a committee of the Board of Council and House of Assembly, to be appointed for that purpose, are hereby authorized to receive tenders for the purchase or rent of any other lands that may be necessary, and for the erecting, renting or purchasing of any buildings for perfecting such police establishment as aforesaid; and of their proceedings in respect of the duty hereby delegated to them, the aforesaid committee shall duly make a report to the Council and Assembly of this Island, as soon as such committee shall have obtained tenders, in order that the Council and Assembly may, if satisfactory, conclude the same without delay. A justice-room to be provided in each district. Also a police establishment and place of confinement in 3 of said districts. Waste land of the Crown to be appropriated to such establishments. A committee of the Council and Assembly to receive tenders for the purchase or rent of other lands, and for the erecting, renting or purchasing buildings, who shall report their proceedings to the Legislature, in order to conclude the same, if satisfactory.

4. And be it further enacted, that if at any time the said places of confinement or houses of correction appointed under this Act, should not be able to accommodate a greater number of offenders than shall be then therein confined, it shall be lawful for any special magistrate, under such circumstances, or in any other case of urgent necessity, to commit any other offender or offenders to any other place of confinement where the said special justice may be satisfied the said offender or offenders may be safely confined, and to be removed from thence whenever any other place of confinement more adapted for the execution of the sentence of the said special justice shall be provided: provided always, that until such places of confinement shall be erected and provided, it shall be lawful for any special justice to commit any offenders to any place of confinement on the estate to which such offender may be attached. For want of room in the said places of confinement, justices may commit offenders to some other. Until such places of confinement shall be provided, apprenticed labourers may be confined on the estate to which they belong, by order of special justices.

5. And it is hereby further enacted, that the said special stipendiary magistrates shall sit weekly, in rotation if more than one, at the justice-room in the district assigned to such magistrate, every day in each week, when he is not engaged in visiting the plantations within his district, pursuant to an Act intituled, "An Act for prescribing the Powers and Duties of Special Magistrates," from the hour of 11 in the forenoon until the hour of two in the afternoon of every such day, and longer if necessary, for the purpose of hearing and deciding all such cases as may be brought before them: nevertheless, it shall and may be lawful at any time, in case of necessity, for any complainant to make application to the nearest special magistrate, who shall, according to the exigency of the case, proceed to investigate and determine on the charge preferred. Special stipendiary magistrates to sit in rotation every day in each week. In cases of necessity complaints may be heard by the nearest special magistrate.

A penal gang to be established at the 3 police establishments.

6. And be it, and it is hereby further enacted, that at the three police establishments to be fixed upon as hereinafter provided, there shall also be established a penal gang, to be composed of such persons as shall be condemned to imprisonment with hard labour.

One sergeant and not more than 9 policemen to be employed at each police establishment. And on each estate 2 policemen from among the apprentices to be nominated by the employer or director, and if there be more than 100 apprentices on such estate, 2 policemen for each 100, to act as auxiliary to the policemen of the district, and to do the duty of the estate when not employed as policemen. Auxiliary policemen to be paid 4*s.* 6*d.* by the employer. And at the instance of the employer or director to take offenders before a special magistrate without summons or warrant, and to keep them in safe custody until so taken.

7. And be it, and it is hereby further enacted, that at three of the police establishments to be fixed upon for that purpose, as hereinafter provided for, there shall be employed one sergeant and not more than nine policemen or constables; and that on each estate in this Island there shall be appointed from the apprentices upon such estate two policemen or constables, to be nominated by the master, director or employer of such apprentices; and on each estate having more than 100 apprenticed labourers, there shall be appointed from among them not less than two constables for every such 100, to act as auxiliary to the policemen of the district: provided that such auxiliary policemen shall not be required to do duty off the estate to which they are attached, except with the consent of the person or employer entitled to their services; such auxiliary policemen to be paid at the rate of one half dollar per month by the estate to which they are attached: and provided also, that such appointment of such apprenticed labourer shall not prevent him or them from executing such duties as he should be bound to do if not so appointed, except at the particular time in which he is actually engaged as such policeman. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any auxiliary policeman or men, at the instance of the master or director or employer of such apprentices, to take any offender or offenders charged by such master or director or employer, before a special magistrate, to investigate any charge, without previous summons or warrant for that purpose, and to keep him or them in safe custody until he or they can be so taken before such special magistrate. And be it further enacted, that all such constables or policemen, and auxiliary policemen, so nominated as aforesaid, shall be appointed by the officer administering the government of this Colony, and may be removed by him for bad conduct or inefficiency.

Policemen and auxiliary policemen to be appointed by the person administering the Government, and to be removed by him for bad conduct.

Labourers refusing to act as auxiliary constables, or auxiliary constables neglecting their duty, and not promptly executing the orders of the justices or their employers, shall suffer any one or more of the punishments specified in the Act for breach of the duties prescribed for apprenticed labourers.

8. And be it further enacted, that if any labourer shall refuse to act as an auxiliary constable, after being appointed as such, or if any auxiliary constable who shall, on complaint made to any special justice, be found not to have promptly executed all orders and directions given by any special justice, or by any other justice of the peace, under the restrictions hereinbefore contained, in every case to which their several jurisdictions may extend, or of any employer or person having authority to command the services of such auxiliary constable, shall suffer, on conviction of the said neglect or reluctance, or disobedience, as aforesaid, before the said special justice, or other justice of the peace, any one or more of the punishments specified in the Act for breach of the duties prescribed for apprenticed labourers.

Auxiliary constables to be sworn by the person first in command, and the nature of their office explained to them, and a staff delivered to each as an emblem of office.

9. And be it further enacted, that after the passing of this Act, and before the 1st day of August next, a time and place shall be fixed in each district, by the appointment of the person first in command in this Island, for administering the oaths of office to the said auxiliary constables, and that the officer by whom the said oaths shall be administered, whose duty it shall be, before such auxiliary constables are sworn, to explain to them the duties of the office they are about to undertake, and the penalties incurred for neglect of the same, shall deliver to such auxiliary constable, so sworn, a staff as an emblem of office; which shall be provided according to the directions of the committee of the Council and Assembly to be appointed as aforesaid: provided always, that upon complaint made by any such auxiliary policeman to the special magistrate within his district, that the master or director of any estate on which he shall have served as such policeman, shall have refused to pay him the said sum of 4*s.* 6*d.* per month for any one or more months, the said special magistrate shall upon conviction before him of the said master or director having so refused, issue his warrant under his hand and seal, authorizing any constable within his district to levy the amount in which such master or director shall be so convicted, on his goods and chattels, and to sell sufficient of the same to satisfy such amount.

On default of payment of the monthly allowance to the auxiliary constables, special justice to issue warrant of levy against the employer.

Constables and policemen may be suspended.

10. And it is hereby further enacted, that any constable or policeman, and auxiliary policeman, may be suspended from office by any special magistrate of the district, subject to disallowance or confirmation by the officer administering the government within this Colony.

Penal gang may be ordered by the special magistrate to work on the provision ground of the district, or may be hired out to work for the benefit of the establishment.

11. And it is hereby further enacted, that as often as the special magistrate of the district on duty shall so direct, the penal gang before mentioned shall, under the superintendence of some member of the police, be employed in any laborious work upon the provision grounds of the police establishment, for the support of the prisoners at such settlement, or such penal gang may be employed as hired labourers in any laborious work, or otherwise, towards the general maintenance of the establishment.

Special justice to make a quarterly return to the officer administering the Government of the effective strength and condition of police force, and of the state of the buildings, &c.

12. And it is hereby further enacted, that the special justice shall, once in each quarter, make to the officer administering the government within this Colony, a report of the effective strength and condition of the police force at each settlement, and of the state of the buildings and provision grounds there, and of the state and conduct of the prisoners confined therein.

Committee of the Council and Assembly to establish rules for the internal discipline of the

13. And it is hereby further enacted, that a committee shall be appointed from the Board of Council and House of Assembly, to determine on the three districts in which the said police establishments shall be fixed; to establish necessary rules for the internal discipline of the the said police settlement; for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes; for the classification of prisoners; for their religious instruction; for the maintenance of order, cleanliness and sobriety among them; and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules; and also for ascertaining the necessary weapons and accoutrements to be furnished to the policemen or constables, and auxiliary policemen, and fixing a distinguishing dress to be worn by them; and that such committee shall duly report to the Board of Council and House of Assembly what they shall determine in pursuance of such reference to them as aforesaid; and such report being approved by the officer administering the government within this Colony, and the Council and Assembly of the same, shall have therein the force and effect of law: provided always, that the officer administering the government within this Colony, and the Council and Assembly of the same, may, if they think fit, either absolutely confirm such report, or partially or wholly alter and change the rules thereby established, and may from time to time vary such rules as circumstances may require.

police settlements, &c., and to report to the Legislature the several regulations they may adopt, which being approved by the person first in command and the Legislature, shall have the force of law.

14. And it is hereby further enacted, that the constables or policemen in each district shall receive pay from the public treasury, at the rate of 3 s. currency per day for each private, and 4 s. 6 d. currency for each sergeant.

Pay of policemen.

15. And it is hereby further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the policemen or constables and auxiliary policemen, to carry into execution such orders as they shall receive from the special justice, for the prevention or repressing of crimes, and for enforcing obedience to the law; and such policemen or constables, and such auxiliary policemen, shall detain and carry, without summons or warrant, on their own view, before a special justice, any person in the actual commission of a breach of the peace, or any injury to public or private property.

Policemen and auxiliary policemen may on their own view, without warrant, take offenders before a special magistrate.

16. And be it further enacted, that this Act shall not be in force for any longer period than 12 months from the passing thereof.

Act in force for 12 months.

17. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed during this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly.

This Act may be altered during the present session.

AN ACT to punish Apprenticed Labourers for Offences against the public Welfare.

No. 31.

WHEREAS the peace and good order of society in this Island may be endangered by the distinct class of apprenticed labourers within the same, and it is necessary to provide against the said offences; Be it, and it is hereby enacted by the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Christopher,

Preamble.

1. That from and after the 1st day of August 1834, if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace within this Island who shall or may be present at the same, shall order the said three or more apprenticed labourers to disperse, and in case of neglect or refusal to obey such order, then the said justice of the peace shall cause a flag, or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited as a warning to all persons then and there present, to separate and disperse quietly.

Three or more apprenticed labourers uniting together in tumultuous assemblage, to disperse by order of a justice of the peace.

2. And be it further enacted, that all persons who at the expiration of 10 minutes from and after the exhibition of such flag or signal, shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall, on conviction before any one or more justices of the peace within this Island, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding 12 months

Punishment of apprenticed labourers for riotous conduct.

3. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall after the 1st day of August 1834, reside beyond the limits of the district in which such apprenticed labourer may be resident on the said 1st day of August 1834, unless by the authority of his or her employer, to be for that purpose given him or her in writing: provided always, that in cases where such consent is refused by the employer aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for in case of refusal by the employer, special justice may, if he see fit, grant leave for such residence.

the special magistrate of the district in which such labourer shall as aforesaid be resident on the said 1st day of August 1834, to inquire into and investigate the cause or causes of such refusal, and if the said employer doth not sufficiently account for such refusal, then the said special magistrate shall and may give to such apprenticed labourer, under his the said special magistrate's hand and seal, an authority to reside out of the said district: provided always, that the said special magistrate shall record such investigation, and the evidence taken respecting the same, and the date of the authority in such case given as aforesaid, in the record book directed by the second clause of an Act intituled "An Act for prescribing the Powers and Duties of Special Magistrates."

Such leave to be recorded.

Labourers found beyond their district without a pass may be apprehended by any constable, and shall on conviction be adjudged a vagabond, and be punished by order of special justice.

4. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer found or to be found beyond the limits of the district in which he or she shall have been on the said 1st day of August 1834 resident as aforesaid, except in his or her way to and from the nearest market, or to or from some place of public worship, and not having a written pass or authority for that purpose from his employer, or from the special magistrate as hereinbefore directed, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained by any constable or policeman within this Island, and shall, on conviction before any justice of the peace within this Island, be adjudged a vagabond, and shall by the order and conviction under the hand and seal of such justice, be taken by any constable or policemen into the district to which such apprenticed labourer belongs, and there delivered over to the special magistrate of such district, together with such order and conviction, and the said special magistrate of the district to which the said apprenticed labourer belongs, shall forthwith cause the said apprenticed labourer to undergo the punishment directed in such conviction: provided always, that the said special magistrate shall record the said conviction, and the date of the execution of the same, in the same manner as is provided for the record of conviction in clause second of an Act intituled "An Act for prescribing the Powers and Duties of Special Magistrates."

If absent for 7 days or more, labourer to be adjudged a runaway.

5. And it be further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, for seven days or upwards, absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service, without a reasonable cause, to be allowed by the special magistrate of the district to which he or she may belong, he or she shall, on complaint being made to such special magistrate, and on conviction of such offence, be adjudged a runaway, and shall be sentenced to three months imprisonment and hard labour in case of females, and in case of males to three months imprisonment and hard labour, and whipping, not exceeding 39 stripes with a cat.

Punishment for such offence.

Labourers establishing themselves as a distinct community in any part of the Island to be dislodged,

6. And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any special justice, that any apprenticed labourers have without lawful authority established themselves in any part of this Island as a distinct community, such justice of the peace shall cause any such community to be dislodged, and if necessary, shall also cause their habitations to be taken down and removed, and disposed of in such manner as to the said justice shall seem fit.

And may be transported.

7. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted of having been a member of any such community, shall be liable to transportation, and to imprisonment and hard labour until such transportation can be effected, or to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months, and to whipping by any number of stripes not exceeding 39 with a cat, in case of such offender being a male, but in case of such offender being a female, the punishment by whipping not to be inflicted.

Person first in command may order out the militia to assist in dislodging any such community as aforesaid.

8. And be it further enacted, that the officer administering the government of this Island, shall and may at the request of any magistrate, order out the whole or any part of the militia of this Island, and all officers and privates of the said militia, so ordered out as aforesaid, shall aid and assist in carrying into effect any directions which may be issued to them by the said first in command, for dislodging any such community as aforesaid, and the said officers and privates of the said militia are hereby indemnified against all and all manner of prosecutions, suits and punishment for any loss of life or injury that may arise in the lawful execution of such duty as aforesaid.

Fathers to provide for their children under 12 years not being apprentices, and in default to be compelled to labour in their extra hours for such purpose.

9. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer, being in good health and able to work, and being the reputed father of a child under the age of 12 years, not being an apprenticed labourer under the terms of the laws of this Island, shall not make adequate provision for the subsistence of such child, it shall be lawful for any special magistrate to adjudge any such labourer to labour in his extra hours, and in case of refusal, then to hard labour, and to apply the earnings of such labour towards the support and maintenance of any such child.

Such persons may be hired out to labour as aforesaid.

10. And be it further enacted, that for the purpose last aforesaid, such special justice may hire out the labour of any such reputed father to any person who may be willing to agree for the same, or to labour on any public works, on the best terms which can be procured for the same.

For so long a time as may be necessary to provide for such child for 1 month in advance.

11. And be it further enacted, that such compulsory labour as aforesaid shall not be continued longer than may be necessary to provide for the maintenance of the child of such labourer, for one month in advance.

If no father living, the mother to provide for the child.

12. And be it further enacted, that in case any such child so unprovided for as aforesaid shall have no father living, then the regulations aforesaid shall apply to the mother of such child child or children, if alive, and competent by her labour to provide for the maintenance of such child or children. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

13. And be it further enacted, that all the penalties by law denounced in case of indolence, neglect of work, or otherwise in respect of labour performed by the apprenticed labourers, in the service of their employers, shall apply to the case of labour undertaken for the maintenance of any such child as aforesaid, by virtue of any such order as aforesaid. Penalties in cases of default.

14. And be it further enacted, that if any labourer or labourers shall, without lawful authority, enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty, or to any person, it shall be lawful for any special justice to dispossess such labourer or labourers from such land, and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same, with all the crops thereon growing, and all cattle, stock and goods thereon found, to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not within one month after such seizure appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the special justice shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon to be sold, and cause the proceeds of such sales to be paid over to the public treasurer of this Island. Labourers unlawfully entering into possession of land to be dispossessed by special justices, &c.

15. And be it further enacted, that the summary process last aforesaid shall not be taken or used in any case where any such apprenticed labourer may have been for two years then next preceding in the undisturbed and authorized possession of any such land. Unless such labourer shall have 2 years quiet possession.

16. And be it further enacted, that the said special magistrate may further adjudge any apprenticed labourer unlawfully taking possession of such land, to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, if it be made to appear to his the said special magistrate's satisfaction that such possession was taken with the knowledge that the party so taking possession had no lawful claim thereto. Such unlawful possession may be punished with 3 months imprisonment.

17. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall quit this Island, except with a passport from the person first in command, which passport shall not be granted without the written consent of the employer of such apprenticed labourer. Person first in command may grant a pass to apprenticed labourer to quit the Island.

18. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall quit or attempt to quit this Island without such passport as aforesaid, such apprenticed labourer shall, on conviction before the special magistrate, be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding six months. Labourer quitting the Island without such pass liable to 6 months imprisonment with hard labour.

19. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer whose ordinary occupation is on the sea, or in any navigable stream, as a fisherman or mariner, shall be registered as such at the office of the special magistrate of the district, with the knowledge and consent of his employer; and any apprenticed labourer engaging in such occupation without being first so registered, shall, on conviction before the said special magistrate, be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months. Labourers being mariners or fishermen to be registered as such.

20. And be it further enacted, that all vessels and boats in this Island not registered under the Navigation Acts shall be registered and numbered at the office of the special magistrate of the district to which they belong, with whom shall be entered the description of the vessel or boat, the name of the owner, and the place at which the same is usually moored or hauled up. Vessels and boats not registered under the Navigation Act to be registered at the office of the special magistrate of the district.

21. And be it further enacted, that no person within this Island shall keep a vessel or boat so registered, except by a licence under the hands of two of His Majesty's justices assigned to keep the peace within this Island, which licence must be recorded in the secretary's office, for the recording of which the secretary of the Island shall and may demand and receive the sum of 4*s.* 6*d.* from the person presenting the same to be recorded. Persons owning such vessels and boats to obtain a licence from 2 justices of the peace.

22. And be it further enacted, that the owners or directors of such licensed vessels or boats shall be bound to secure them when not actually afloat at the place or places mentioned in such licence. Vessels and boats to be secured when not afloat.

23. And be it further enacted, that all unlicensed vessels or boats shall be liable to seizure and confiscation; and that all officers of His Majesty's customs, magistrates and peace officers within this Island may seize the same, and prosecute the same to condemnation before two or more justices of the peace, one half of the proceeds of sale whereof, after payment of costs and expenses, to be given to such seizor and prosecutor, and the other half to be paid into the treasury of this Island. Unlicensed vessels and boats liable to seizure and condemnation before one or more justices of the peace.

24. And be it further enacted, that all other vessels and boats moored at any place not mentioned in the licence shall be liable to detention by any of the above officers or magistrates, until the owner thereof shall have order for restitution, or shall have paid a fine of not less than 20*s.* nor more than 5*l.*: provided always, that the person or persons so detaining the said boat or vessel for being moored at a place not mentioned in the licence, shall forthwith report the same to the special magistrate of the district in which the same is detained, to whom the person claiming the boat or vessel shall apply for restitution of the same, and to whom the said person claiming as aforesaid shall, if it shall seem fit to the said magistrate, pay the said fine, one half to be delivered over by the said magistrate to the person seizing or detaining, and the other half into the public treasury of this Island. Vessels and boats not moored as directed in licence to be detained, and owner to pay a penalty not less than 20*s.*, nor more than 5*l.* Such detentions to be reported to special magistrates.

Penalty of 50*l.* against any person taking any apprenticed labourer off the Island without licence, and in default of payment to imprisonment not exceeding 3 months for the first offence, and to transportation not exceeding 7 years for second offence.

25. And be it further enacted, that all and every person and persons removing or assisting to remove any apprenticed labourer from this Island in any boat or vessel, without such labourer having such licence as hereinbefore directed, shall be liable, on conviction thereof before any two magistrates of the Island, to pay a fine of 50 l., to be recovered by warrant of levy and distress, under the hands and seals of the said magistrates, and in default of such payment to imprisonment for any time not exceeding three months for the first offence, and to transportation for any term not exceeding seven years for the second offence.

26. And whereas there may be certain acts done by apprenticed labourers which may be considered to amount to offences under this Act, and also under an Act intituled, "An Act for prescribing the Duties and regulating the Conduct of Apprenticed Labourers;" Be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be liable to be punished both under the provisions of the said last recited Act, and of this present Act, for any offence by him or her committed.

27. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly.

No. 33.

AN ACT to regulate the dissolution of Apprenticeship by the voluntary act of the Employer, and to compel such dissolution in cases where the Labourer is able and willing to purchase his or her discharge from Apprenticeship.

Preamble.

WHEREAS by a certain Act of the Governor, Council and Assembly of this Island, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in the said Island, and for the establishment of a system of Apprenticeship for a limited time in lieu thereof," persons hitherto held in slavery will become apprenticed labourers, and it is necessary to provide certain rules for the dissolution of such apprenticeship under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant-governor of Your Majesty's Islands of St. Christopher and Anguilla, and the Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Christopher, pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained, Apprenticed labourers may be discharged from such apprenticeship before the expiration of the term.

1. And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that if before the apprenticeship created by the hereinbefore mentioned Act, or by any other Act of the Legislature of this Island, or any enactment of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, shall have expired, the person or persons entitled for and during the remainder of any term to the services of any apprenticed labourer, under and by such laws as aforesaid, shall be desirous to discharge him or her from such apprenticeship, it shall be lawful for such person or persons so to do by any deed or instrument to be by him, her or them for that purpose made and executed, which deed or instrument shall be in such form, and shall be executed and recorded in such manner and with such solemnities as hereinafter mentioned: provided nevertheless, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship, by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any such disease, mental or bodily infirmity, as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom.

Employers discharging apprentices of the age of 50 years, or who may be incapable of earning their own subsistence, shall provide for them in the same manner as if they had not been so discharged.

Such discharge to be by deed under the hand and seal of the party executing the same.

2. And be it further enacted, that such discharge shall be by deed, under the hand and seal of the party making the same, to be executed in the presence of and attested by one or more credible witness, and shall be recorded in the office of the registrar of deeds within one month from the day of the execution thereof; and failing in any of the particulars aforesaid, every such discharge shall be void.

The proceedings to be taken in cases where the employer is unwilling,

3. And be it further enacted, that in order to provide for the discharge of apprenticed labourers, in cases where the employers of any such apprenticed labourer may be unwilling or or unable to contract for such discharge, if the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Island, or any person having any interest in the services of any such apprenticed labourer, shall be unwilling to effect his or her discharge from apprenticeship, or shall by reason of any mortgage, or settlement or lease, or charge upon or interest in the services of any such apprenticed labourer being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge from apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer, or if the employer or any other person having a charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer shall be a minor or married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or if the person really entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer shall be absent from the said Island, or shall not be known, or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in the said Island, wherein the title or right to the services of the said apprenticed labourer shall or may be in controversy, or if the employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall demand, as the price of his or her discharge, a greater sum of money than may appear to the said apprenticed labourer to be his or her fair and just value, then and in each and every of the cases aforesaid any special justice to be appointed under and by virtue of any Act of this Island, or any law of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, on application to him for that purpose made by the said apprenticed labourer, or any person on his or her behalf, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer, or legal representative of such employer of such apprenticed labourer, to appear before him by themselves or their agents, at some convenient time and place to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published by the said special justice, in the public newspapers of the Island, of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid; and in such notice all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the said apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, either in their own right or as the agents, guardians, trustees or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claims.

or unable by reason of any mortgage or other legal impediment, to effect a discharge from apprenticeship.

4. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that at the time appointed for any such meeting as aforesaid, the said special justice, in the presence of the employer or legal representative of such employer of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer (or legal representative of such employer), shall proceed to hear, in a summary way, what may be alleged by or on behalf of such apprenticed labourer, and by the employer (or legal representative of such employer) or other person claiming any interest in the services of the said apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, and attending in pursuance of any such notice; or in case it shall be made to appear to the said special justice that a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer cannot legally be effected by private contract, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is a minor or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or that the real employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is absent from the Island, or is unknown, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice in the Island wherein the right or title to the services of such apprenticed labourer is in controversy, then and in every such case the said special justice shall require the apprenticed labourer, or some person on his behalf, and the employer (or legal representative of such employer) of such apprenticed labourer, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate a good and substantial freeholder of the said Island as an appraiser of the value of his or her services; and the two appraisers so chosen shall forthwith choose and appoint another freeholder of the said Island to be an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer (or legal representative of such employer), being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or attending shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said special justice shall nominate an appraiser on behalf of the employer (or legal representative of such employer) omitting or refusing to do so, which two appraisers so appointed shall appoint an umpire as hereinbefore directed.

In cases where by any legal impediment a discharge from apprenticeship cannot be effected, the labourer and employer may each appoint an appraiser of the value of the services of the labourer proposed to be discharged from apprenticeship, and such appraiser may appoint an umpire, &c.

5. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid, shall be duly sworn before the said special justice, to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the services of the apprenticed labourer so proposed to be discharged; and within 14 days next after their appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the services of the said apprenticed labourer, and shall certify such their valuation to the said special justice, under their hands and seals, and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said special justice, within the said term of 14 days, then the said umpire being duly sworn in the manner aforesaid, shall within the next succeeding seven days, certify his valuation to the said special justice; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or in their default, by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and enrolled among the records of the secretary's office, in a book to be by the said secretary kept for that purpose: provided, and be it further enacted, that if the amount of any such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned, within three calendar months next after the enrolment thereof, such enrolment shall be cancelled, and it shall not be lawful for any such apprenticed labourer, or any other person on his or her behalf, again to institute such proceedings as before mentioned for his or her discharge, until the expiration of 12 calendar months, to be computed from the date of such former valuation.

Appraisers to be sworn by special justice, and to certify their award within 14 days, and in case of their default the umpire shall within 7 days certify his valuation.

The valuation of the appraisers or umpire to be enrolled in the secretary's office.

If the valuation be not paid within 3 months the enrolment to be void, and no other proceedings for discharge from apprenticeship to be instituted until the expiration of 12 months.

Appraisers and umpires to take into consideration the qualities, &c. of the apprentice proposed to be discharged in order to come to a fair valuation.

6. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in making any such valuation as aforesaid, the appraisers or umpires, as the case may be, shall and they are hereby required to take into their consideration the qualities of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, as well as his or her skill in any domestic services or employment, or other labour whatsoever, with any other facts or circumstances which, in the opinion of such appraisers or umpire, ought to influence their or his judgment, as to the price to be paid by such apprenticed labourer for his or her discharge: provided always, that if any husband shall be desirous to purchase the discharge of his wife, any wife of her husband, or any parent of his or her legitimate child, it shall be competent for the said special justice so to release or qualify the provisions in this clause of the Act contained, under the circumstances of the case disclosed, as shall be consistent with humanity and justice: provided also, and be it further enacted, that if at any time before the enrolment of any such valuation, it shall be alleged before the said special justice by the employer (or legal representative of such employer) of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, that such apprenticed labourer hath within five years next preceding the date of the application made to such special justice on his or her behalf for such discharge as aforesaid, committed any robbery or theft, the said special justice shall inquire into the truth of such allegation, and if it shall be made to appear to him, by good and sufficient evidence on oath, that such apprenticed labourer hath within the said term of five years committed any robbery or theft, the said special justice shall, and he is required, to make an order for staying such enrolment as aforesaid, and thereupon the same and all other proceedings for the discharge of any such apprenticed labourer shall be stayed until the expiration of the full time of five years from the time of the commission of any such theft or robbery.

The provisions of this clause to be qualified in cases where a husband wishes to purchase the discharge of his wife or child, the wife of her husband or child.

On proof being made that any apprentice proposed to be discharged has, within 5 years preceding the application, committed any theft or robbery, the enrolment of the valuation, and all further proceedings to be stayed for the space of 5 years from the time of the commission of the theft or robbery.

The apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged shall pay the appraised value to his employer or to the treasurer, as is provided for in this clause, which being done the special justice shall give his written certificate of such discharge, which shall be recorded in the office of the registrar of deeds.

7. And be it further enacted, that within three calendar months next after the enrolment of any such valuation as aforesaid, such apprenticed labourer so to be discharged shall pay, under the direction of the said special justice, to the employer or employers, (or legal representative of such employer or employers,) his or her appraised value, taking a receipt in writing from such employer or employers, (or legal representative of such employer or employers,) for every such payment, or if it shall have appeared that any person hath a charge upon or interest in the said apprenticed labourer, and shall have not been a party to the proceedings had for the purpose of effecting the discharge of such apprenticed labourer, or shall be a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic, or if the real employer of such apprenticed labourer shall be absent from the Colony, and not legally represented, or shall not be known, then and in such case, the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged shall pay to the treasurer of the said Island the said appraised value, taking a receipt in writing from such treasurer for every such payment, and the said special justice shall, upon production before him of such receipt from the employer or employers, (or legal representative of such employer or employers) of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, or from the said treasurer of the said Island, upon application to him for that purpose made, make an order for enrolment in 14 days of such receipt, and the said special justice shall further proceed to declare and adjudge that the apprenticed labourer by or on behalf of whom such money hath been paid, is discharged, and shall thereupon give his written certificate to this effect, which may be recorded as all other discharges in the office of the record of deeds, and such apprenticed labourer shall therefrom be deemed, taken and reputed to be discharged to all intents and purposes: provided always, that the reputed employer or employers, (or legal representative of such reputed employer or employers,) so receiving the appraised value of the services of any such apprenticed labourer, shall be liable to answer any person having or claiming to have any right or title to or interest in the services of the said apprenticed labourer, to the extent of such sum so received by any such reputed employer or employers, (or legal representative of such reputed employer or employers.)

Employer receiving the amount of any such valuation shall be liable to answer any person claiming to have any right in the labourer so discharged.

Respecting the amount of valuation paid over to the treasurer, how the same is to be appropriated.

8. And it is hereby further enacted, that the money to arise from the discharge of any apprenticed labourer, and paid as hereinbefore directed to the treasurer of the Island, shall remain in the hands of the said treasurer, and shall bear interest at and after the rate of 5*l.* per centum per annum, and His Majesty's revenue in the said Island shall and is hereby declared to be pledged and responsible for the due payment of such principal money and interest, or shall in the discretion of the said special justice, on application to him for that purpose made, be invested in the purchase, in the name of the said treasurer, of any public funds or securities of Great Britain or Ireland, and the special justice as aforesaid shall, and he is hereby authorized, upon application to him for that purpose made, to direct that any such money be laid out and invested in the purchase of the services of any other apprenticed labourer or labourers, and the apprenticed labourer or labourers so to be purchased as aforesaid, or in case of no such purchase being made, then this money in the hands of the said treasurer, and the interest accruing on such money, or the public funds of Great Britain and Ireland so to be purchased as aforesaid, and the dividends payable thereupon, shall be the property of the person or persons who was or were the employer or employers, (or legal representative of such employer or employers,) of such discharged apprenticed labourer, and shall be subject and liable to all such and the same uses, trusts, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands of what nature or kind soever, as such apprenticed labourer was held upon, under or subject unto at such time of his, her or their discharge; and the said treasurer shall hold the said money, and the interest accruing thereupon, or the said public funds and dividends, subject to such order as the said special justice may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, and upon notice to all other persons interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make, and such principal sum and interest shall by such treasurer be paid and disposed of in pursuance of and in obedience to any such order.

9. And

9. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any such appraisement as aforesaid shall have been rendered necessary by any difference of opinion between the apprenticed labourer and the employer or employers (or legal representative of such employer or employers), respecting the price to be paid by the said apprenticed labourer for his or her discharge, the expense of such appraisement shall be borne by the apprenticed labourer, and be added to the amount of the valuation, if such apprenticed labourer shall be appraised at a sum exceeding or equal to the price demanded by such employer or employers (or legal representative of such employer or employers), or exceeding the sum offered by the apprenticed labourer as the price of his or her discharge, but if the appraised value of the services of such apprenticed labourer shall be less than the price previously demanded by his or her employer or employers (or legal representative of such employer or employers), then the expense of such appraisement shall be wholly borne and defrayed by such employer or employers (or legal representative of such employer or employers), and in case any such appraisement shall have been rendered necessary by any other cause than a difference of opinion as to the price to be paid for the discharge of the apprenticed labourer, the expense of the appraisement shall be equally divided between such apprenticed labourer, and his or her employer or employers, (or legal representative of such employer or employers.)

By whom the expense of appraisement is to be borne, in cases where the same is rendered necessary by any difference berween the labourer and employer as to the value of the services of such labourer; where the appraisement has not been so caused the expenses to be equally borne by the two parties.

10. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for the said special justice to make and prescribe, and from time to time to make and alter as occasion may require, such rules and orders (not herein provided for) as may be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction hereby in him vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to, or interested in any question so depending before him.

Special justices to make and prescribe rules and orders, and from time to time to alter the same as occasion may require.

11. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any person taking any oath under and in pursuance of this Act, who shall be convicted of swearing falsely, shall incur and suffer such punishment as by the law of the Island may be inflicted on any person guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury.

Persons convicted of false swearing, how to be punished.

12. And be it enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed this session, or during the existence of the present Assembly.

This Act may be altered during the present session.

AN ACT to provide for the maintenance, protection and good government of Apprenticed Labourers, and to settle the jurisdiction and authority of Special Magistrates. —(18th July 1834.)

WHEREAS by an Act passed in the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, in the 3d & 4th year of His present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things enacted, that from and after the 1st day of August, in the year of our Lord 1834, slavery shall be utterly and for ever abolished, and declared unlawful throughout the British colonies, plantations and possessions abroad; and that all persons who in conformity with the laws now in force in the said Colonies respectively shall have been duly registered as slaves, and who shall by such registries appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834 of the full age of six years or upwards, being actually within any such Colony, shall be and become apprenticed labourers: And whereas it is expedient and necessary that such apprenticed labourers should be divided into classes, and that due provision be made to secure sufficient maintenance, support and protection to the said apprenticed labourers during the term of their apprenticeship, and that salutary powers to restrain and punish evil-doers, and to compel the idle and dissolute to labour, be established by law and vested in the magistrates to be for such purposes specially appointed under the authority of the hereinbefore recited Act: We, therefore, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Governor and Commander-in-chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla and the Virgin Islands, and Dominica, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Nevis, do pray Your most Excellent Majesty, that it be enacted, and be it and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that all apprenticed labourers who in their state of slavery were usually employed in the cultivation of the land, or in the manufacture of colonial produce on the lands belonging to their owners, and who have been registered as attached to such lands, shall be and shall be termed prædial attached apprenticed labourers; and all apprenticed labourers who in their state of slavery were usually employed as aforesaid, but have been registered as personal slaves, and not as attached to any lands or estate belonging to their owners, shall be and shall be termed prædial unattached apprenticed labourers; and all apprenticed labourers who shall not have been usually employed in works of agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, whether registered in their state of slavery as attached to lands or as personal slaves, slaves, shall be and shall be termed non-prædial apprenticed labourers: provided always, that no person of the age of 12 years or upwards shall be included in either of the two aforesaid classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person for 12 calendar months at the least next before the passing of the Act of the Imperial Parliament hereinbefore cited, shall have been habitually employed in the cultivation of the land, or in the manufacture of colonial produce.

2. And to the intent that the classification of apprenticed labourers may be definitively and securely settled and determined, Be it further enacted, that the registrar of slaves shall extract from the books of registration separate lists or returns of all the slaves appearing by the said books of registration to belong to the several owners of slaves in this Island, and shall deliver such lists to such owners of slaves, and to the legal representatives of such owners as shall be absent; and such returns shall contain the names, sexes and ages of such slaves, made up to the latest period antecedent to the 1st day of August 1834, at which the registration of slaves by any law now in force or hereafter to be enacted for such purpose may be legally authorized to be made; and a certificate signed by the registrar, that such return has been truly extracted from the books of registration, shall to each return be affixed; and for such returns the registrar of slaves shall be entitled to and shall receive from the public funds of this Island the sum of 300 l. current money, as soon as the said returns shall all be completed and filed in his office as hereinafter is provided.

3. And be further enacted, that every owner of slaves and legal representative of any absent owner shall mark on the list of his slaves delivered to him by the registrar as is aforesaid, the names, in the first place, of such slaves as shall on the said 1st day of August, in the year 1834, be under the age of six years, by affixing to each of such names the word "Infant;" and shall then distinguish to which of the three aforesaid classes of apprenticed labourers the residue of the slaves on such list will belong, by affixing to the name of each prædial attached slave the letters P. A., of each prædial unattached slave the letters P. U., and of each non-prædial slave the letters N. P.; and at the foot of every such list or return so marked and distinguished by words and letters as aforesaid, shall be annexed an affidavit, sworn to by the owner or legal representative of the owner therein concerned, before any judge of the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, or any justice of the peace, to the effect that the distinctions therein made correspond with the condition and occupation usually appertaining to and pursued by each of the slaves therein referred to, according to the provisions and regulations with regard to the classification of apprenticed labourers as hereinbefore established; and every such list or return, when completed in manner aforesaid, shall be filed in the office of the registrar of slaves, and shall there remain during the continuance of the apprenticeship of the persons therein enumerated, and shall be open to the inspection of any person who shall desire to examine the same, at all reasonable hours, without any fee or reward whatever.

4. And be it further enacted, that if any person whosoever be aggrieved or dissatisfied by or on account of any matter or thing contained in any return of slaves made as aforesaid, it shall be lawful at any time antecedent to the 1st day of August, in the year 1836, for such person to apply by petition to the chief or to any other judge of the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, setting forth the nature of the grievance complained of; and the judge to whom any such petition may be preferred is hereby declared to have full power and authority to summon all persons whom he may deem necessary to appear before him, and to proceed in a summary way to hear and to decide upon the same, and to order such return so complained against to be corrected as he may deem meet, and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

5. And be it further enacted, that if any question shall arise at any time respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer shall belong, the return filed in the registrar's office as aforesaid, or a certified extract thereof, shall be taken as conclusive evidence thereupon, subject nevertheless to any alteration to be made therein by the authority hereinbefore last provided.

6. And be it further enacted, that every person for the time being entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer, shall supply every such apprenticed labourer weekly with nine pints of Indian or Guinea corn or beans, or eight pints of pease or wheat, or rye flour or Indian corn meal, or nine pints of oatmeal, or seven pints of rice, or eight pints of cassava flour or farine, or eight pounds of biscuit, or 20 pounds of yams or potatoes, or 16 pounds of eddoes or tanias, or 30 pounds of plantains or bananas, and also one pound and one quarter of herrings, shads, mackarel or other salted provisions, or two pounds and one half of fresh fish or other fresh provisions; all which said provisions shall be of good and wholesome quality, upon pain of incurring a penalty of any sum not exceeding 10 s. current money per week for every apprenticed labourer whom he shall neglect to supply with provisions as aforesaid: provided always, that no penalty shall be recoverable for or on account of any neglect to supply provisions to any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, unless complaint of such neglect shall be made to any magistrate having special jurisdiction therein, within one week after the time that such provisions ought to have been supplied as aforesaid; provided also, that it shall and may be lawful for such person entitled for the time being to the services of any apprenticed labourer to reduce the quantity of provisions hereinbefore mentioned to four fifths in the whole of the quantity hereby required to be given to such apprenticed labourer, during such time as such apprenticed labourer shall be actually employed in the manufacture of sugar.

7. And whereas from the situation and local circumstances of many estates in this Island, the owners and directors of such estates may be enabled to allot portions of land to the apprenticed labourers, sufficient for their support and maintenance; Be it therefore enacted, that that it shall and may be lawful for any employer of apprenticed labourers to assign to such apprenticed labourers any piece or pieces of land in cultivation, at and after the proportion of one acre to every five apprenticed labourers in his employ, for the purpose of raising provisions for their subsistence, in lieu of any allowance hereinbefore required to be given, excepting salt or fresh provisions; and for the cultivation of such provision grounds, every employer is hereby required to allow to every apprenticed labourer in his employ nine hours in every week, to be deducted from any time during which such apprenticed labourers may by law be required to labour for the benefit of such employer.

8. And be it further enacted, that every person entitled for the time being to the services of any apprenticed labourer shall supply every such apprenticed labourer yearly with five yards of woollen cloth and six yards of linen (Osnaburgh), upon pain of incurring a penalty of any sum not exceeding 2 l. current money for every such apprenticed labourer whom he shall neglect to supply yearly with such clothing as aforesaid.

9. And be it further enacted, that if any person entitled for the time being to the services of any apprenticed labourer shall wilfully omit or neglect to procure proper medical assistance for any apprenticed labourer who, from sickness or any other cause, may stand in need thereof, or shall wilfully omit or neglect to provide and furnish such apprenticed labourer with all such food, wine, nourishment and necessaries as the medical practitioner in attendance shall order or direct, being duly convicted thereof, he shall forfeit and pay for every such omission or neglect a fine of any sum not exceeding 10 l. current money.

10. And for the better prevention and punishment of cruelty, injustice, or other wrong or injury which may be done to or inflicted upon any apprenticed labourer by the person or persons entitled to his or her services, Be it further enacted, that if any person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer shall whip, beat, confine, imprison or otherwise maltreat any such apprenticed labourer, being actually employed in his or her service, he or she so offending, being duly convicted of such offence, shall incur a penalty of any sum not exceeding 10 l. current money, or in default of payment thereof shall suffer imprisonment for any time not exceeding 30 days.

Provided always, that it shall and may be competent for any apprenticed labourer to maintain any civil suit or action for damages on account of any such injury or maltreatment, as in the case of any other free person, instead of preferring his complaint before any magistrate having jurisdiction therein; provided also, that any such magistrate may abstain from imposing such penalty as aforesaid if he shall see fit so to do, and in lieu thereof may bind by recognizance, or if need be, may commit the offender to take his trial for such offence in the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas; and if any person shall be convicted in the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas of cruelty to any apprenticed labourer, or shall twice be convicted in the said court of inflicting any corporal punishment, or of making any assault und battery upon any apprenticed labourer to whose services such person shall be legally entitled, such apprenticed labourer shall be discharged from his or her apprenticeship by order of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

11. And whereas by the Act hereinbefore cited, it is enacted and declared, that no prædial apprenticed labourer shall be bound or be liable by virtue of such apprenticeship to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week: And whereas it is expedient that such employer and apprenticed labourer should be rendered competent to enter into mutual contracts or agreements, for the purpose of settling the method of apportioning the time during which such apprenticed labourer shall be required to labour in the service of his employer, into such divisions as may be mutually agreed upon; Be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer to contract in writing with any such apprenticed labourer respecting the distribution of labour in any number of separate apportionments or subdivisions which the said parties may mutually agree upon: provided always, that no such contract shall continue in force or be binding upon the parties entering into the same for a longer period than 14 days, unless approved and signed by a magistrate having special jurisdiction therein; and if any person entitled to the services of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall compel such prædial apprenticed labourer to labour in his service for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week, he or she being duly convicted thereof, shall forfeit and pay for the benefit of such apprenticed labourer for every such offence the sum of 2 s. for every hour in which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall be compelled to labour beyond the time allowed by law as aforesaid.

12. And be it further enacted, that every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his infancy, shall be competent to enter into any contract for extra service or labour for hire; but that no contract between any employer and any apprenticed labourer for any extra service or labour for hire shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

13. And be it further enacted, that if any employer shall neglect or refuse to pay to any apprenticed labourer in his employ the consideration stipulated for in any contract for extra service or labour for hire, it shall be competent for any magistrate having special jurisdiction in the premises, upon complaint made to him by such apprenticed labourer, to investigate the same, and upon proof of such neglect or refusal such magistrate may award payment of such consideration; and if such consideration be not fully paid and satisfied within one week next after such award, it shall be lawful for such magistrate to issue an attachment directed to the provost-marshal, or his lawful deputy, against the produce, utensils and other chattels upon such plantation, respecting the cultivation of which such contract had been made, which attachment shall be executed at any season of the year, and the property thereby levied levied shall be sold in like manner as is provided in similar cases with respect to executions issued out of the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas.

14. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be subjected by his employer to task work of any description against his or her consent.

15. And whereas great benefits have frequently been obtained by removing the labourers, or some of them, from one plantation to another, being the property of one and the same proprietor; Be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any person entitled to the services of any attached prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers to transfer his or their services to any other estate or plantation within this Island to such person belonging, having previously obtained the written consent and approbation so to do of any one or more justices of the peace having special jurisdiction therein.

16. And whereas it is necessary that rules should be established for determining the manner and form in which the voluntary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such apprenticeship may be effected, and for prescribing the form and manner in which the purchase, by any such apprenticed labourer, of his discharge from such apprenticeship, without, or if necessary, in opposition to the consent of the person entitled to his services, shall also be effected; Be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any apprenticed labourer, or for any other person on his behalf, to purchase his discharge from such apprenticeship, for such sum of money or other consideration as may be agreed upon between such apprenticed labourer, or any person on his behalf, and the person entitled for the time being to the services of such apprenticed labourer: provided nevertheless, that if any person discharged from any such apprenticeship, by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any such disease, or mental or bodily infirmity, as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom; but if it shall happen that the person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer shall be unwilling to grant such discharge from apprenticeship as aforesaid for the consideration in that behalf proposed, or if such person or persons, or any of them, shall be a minor, or married woman, or idiot, or lunatic, or shall be under any legal or other disability, or shall be absent from this Island without having a lawful and authorized representative therein, or cannot be found or known, or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court, either in this Island or elsewhere, touching the right or title to the services of such apprenticed labourer, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful for such apprenticed labourer to appoint one appraiser on his part, and for the person entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer, or having the immediate direction and control of such apprenticed labourer, as the case may be, to appoint one other appraiser on his part, which two appraisers shall determine the price to be paid for the full discharge of such apprenticed labourer from his apprenticeship; but if the appraisers so appointed shall not agree in their determination respecting the price to be paid by or on account of such apprenticed labourer for his discharge from apprenticeship as aforesaid, the said appraisers shall refer the whole matter in difference to an umpire to be by them chosen, and the determination of such umpire shall in all respects be final and conclusive upon all parties concerned therein; and in all cases where the person or persons entitled, or claiming to be entitled, to the services of any such apprenticed labourers, shall be subject to any of the disabilities hereinbefore mentioned, or shall be absent from this Island without having a lawful and authorized representative therein, or cannot be found or known, it shall and may be lawful for such apprenticed labourer to pay the money so assessed as the value of his discharge from apprenticeship by the appraisers or umpire, as the case may be, into the hands of the treasurer of this Island, or his lawful deputy, which money shall remain and be a lien in the public revenues of this Island, for the benefit of such person or persons, his or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, who may be or may become legally or equitably entitled thereto; and upon the payment of such money by such apprenticed labourer to the treasurer, or his lawful deputy as aforesaid, the apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer shall immediately cease and determine.

17. And to the intent that no doubt or difficulty may arise respecting the proof or validity of the discharge of any apprenticed labourer from his apprenticeship, after such discharge shall have been purchased as aforesaid; Be it further enacted, that any receipt or other document in writing which shall contain sufficient words of acknowledgment by the person or persons whose signature or signatures shall be affixed thereto (being by law entitled to grant such discharge), by which it shall appear that the money therein mentioned had been paid as the purchase money for the discharge of such apprenticed labourer as shall be therein named from his apprenticeship, or words to the tenor and effect thereof (which receipt or document the grantor of such discharge is hereby required to execute and deliver to the party thereby discharged), shall be deemed and taken to be sufficient proof of such discharge, and such discharge shall to all intents and purposes be valid and effectual in the law.

18. And be it further enacted, that if any person shall falsely pretend to grant to any apprenticed labourer his or her discharge from apprenticeship, not being legally entitled so to do, and under colour of such pretended discharge shall receive from any person whomsoever any money or other valuable consideration for or on account thereof, such person so falsely pretending as aforesaid is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be indicted for the same in the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas in this Island, and being duly convicted thereof, shall suffer such punishment by fine not exceeding 100 l. current rent money, or by imprisonment for any time not exceeding six calendar months, or both, as the court shall deem it proper to inflict; and no punishment inflicted by the said court shall be a bar to any action or suit which may be commenced by any person aggrieved by reason of the premises, or shall be considered a mitigation of any damages which may be recovered by law for or on account of such trespass or injury.

19. And be it further enacted, that the right or interest of any person to and in the services of any prædial attached apprenticed labourer, shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, in all respects according to the rules, and subject to the forms and ceremonies of the law which are necessary in this Island to pass or transfer real estate; and such right or interest to and in the services of any prædial unattached apprenticed labourer, or of any non-prædial apprenticed labourer, shall pass and be transferable by the means and in the manner aforesaid, in all respects according to the rules, and subject to the forms and ceremonies of the law which are necessary in this Island to pass or transfer personal estate.

20. And whereas it is necessary for the preservation of peace in this Island, that proper regulations should be framed and established for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual and regular discharge of their duty; Be it therefore enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall omit or refuse to perform any work or labour which he may be lawfully required by his employer, or by the sentence of any magistrate having special jurisdiction in such case, to do, or shall be guilty of wilful negligence or waste in performing the same, or shall wilfully and maliciously destroy or injure any goods or property of his employer, whether committed to his charge or otherwise, or shall commit any wilful breach of trust in regard to such goods or property, or shall wilfully ill use or kill the cattle or other live stock belonging to his employer, or shall neglect or refuse to obey the lawful commands of any person lawfully in authority over him, or shall use insolent language or demeanour to or against such person, or shall be guilty of tumultuous or disorderly conduct on the estate or plantation to which he may be attached or on which he may usually reside, or shall neglect or refuse to perform and fulfil any contract for any hired service with the person entitled for the time being to his service, or shall wilfully abscond from his employer's service during any part of the time in which he may be bound to labour for his employer by virtue of his apprenticeship, such apprenticed labourer, being duly convicted of any such offence, shall be liable to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding one calendar month: provided always, that when any apprenticed labourer shall wilfully and without any reasonable cause abscond from his employer's service, during any part of the time in which he may be bound to labour for his employer by virtue of his apprenticeship, such apprenticed labourer, in lieu of being sentenced to suffer imprisonment, may be compelled, at the discretion of the convicting magistrate, either to serve his employer two extra hours for every hour in which he shall have absented himself as aforesaid, provided that such extra hours shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week, or for so long a time after the expiration of his apprenticeship as he shall have so absented himself from such service, or may be compelled to make satisfaction to his employer for the loss sustained by such absence, but nevertheless, so that such extra service or satisfaction shall not be compellable after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer.

21. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer, being in good health and able to work, and being the father of a child under the age of 12 years, not being an apprenticed labourer, shall not make adequate provision for the subsistence of such child, it shall be lawful for any magistrate having special jurisdiction therein, to adjudge and sentence any such apprenticed labourer to hard labour on any public works, or such magistrate may hire any such apprenticed labourer on the best terms which can be procured, to labour in extra hours for any person who may be willing to contract for the same: provided always, that in case such child so unprovided for as aforesaid shall have no father living, the mother of such child, if alive and competent by her labour to provide for the maintenance of such child, shall be liable to be sentenced to such compulsory labour as aforesaid; provided also, that such compulsory labour shall not be continued longer than may be necessary to provide for the maintenance of such child for one month in advance.

22. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall without lawful authority enter upon and take possession of any land belonging to any other person, it shall and may be lawful for any magistrate having special jurisdiction therein, to dispossess and eject such apprenticed labourer from such land, and to cause the same with all crops growing thereupon, and all buildings thereon erected, to be delivered up to the owner of such land, and may further adjudge such apprenticed labourer to suffer imprisonment for any time not exceeding three calendar months, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of such magistrate that such apprenticed labourer had wrongfully and fraudulently taken such possession.

23. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall depart or attempt to depart from this Island without a passport under the hand of the Governor or the officer administering the government of this Island for the time being, which passport shall not be granted except with the consent in writing of the employer of such apprenticed labourer, such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to suffer imprisonment for any time not exceeding six calendar months: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to prevent any non-prædial apprenticed labourer, who shall be truly a domestic servant, or an attendant upon the person of his employer, or of any part of his family, from departing from this Island in attendance upon or in the same ship or vessel with his said employer, employer, or any part of his family, without any passport or other written authority whatsoever.

24. And be it further enacted, that if any person shall carry away or assist to carry away any apprenticed labourer from this Colony in any boat or vessel, without a passport, except in such cases as hereinbefore is excepted, such person so offending is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be indicted for the same in the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, as for an offence against this Act, and being duly convicted thereof, shall be liable to a penalty to our Sovereign Lord the King, in any sum not exceeding 100 l., or to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding six months, or to both, at the discretion of the court.

25. And be it further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, such apprenticed labourers shall be deemed to be guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and being duly convicted thereof, shall be adjudged to be imprisoned for any period not exceeding six calendar months.

26. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be compelled by virtue of any law in force in this Island to serve in the militia, or to be a juror on any trial had in any of the courts of justice in this Island, during the term of his apprenticeship.

27. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be arrested or imprisoned for debt under or by authority of any legal process whatsoever.

28. And whereas by the Act of the Imperial Parliament hereinbefore cited, His Majesty is authorized and empowered to appoint, by one or more special commission or commissions, one or more person or persons to be a justice or justices of the peace for this Island, for the special purpose of giving effect to the aforesaid Act of the Imperial Parliament, and to such Acts as may be passed by the Legislature of this Island, for giving more complete effect thereto: And whereas it is expedient that the jurisdiction and duties of such special justice or justices should be accurately settled and defined by law; Be it therefore enacted, that such justice or justices so appointed by special commission or commissions as aforesaid, but not any justice or justices appointed by the general commission of the peace or otherwise, shall have full power and authority to hear and determine, according to the provisions of this or of any other Act for such purpose to be enacted, all such complaints, charges and offences as are hereinbefore mentioned and recited, which may be made by any apprenticed labourer against the person or persons entitled by law for the time being to his or her services, or by any such person or persons so entitled to such services against any apprenticed labourer who may be actually in his or her employ, and to give judgment thereupon, and shall have power to compel the attendance of witnesses and persons charged with any such offence of which such justice is or shall hereafter be authorized by law to take cognizance, and may punish for contempts, and may cause the execution of his or their judgments to be done by such ways and means, and by such legal process, as justices of the peace, in the ordinary and accustomed execution of their office, are authorized by law to use and employ in similar cases.

29. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any justice having special jurisdiction under this Act, to visit any plantation at any time by day, and to inspect the apprenticed labourers thereon resident whensoever he may think proper.

30. And for the better protection of such special justice or justices in executing the duties of his or their office, Be it further enacted, that an Act passed by the Captain-general, the Council and Assembly of this Island, in the 60th year of the reign of his late Majesty George the Third, intituled "An Act for rendering Justices more safe in the execution o their Office, and for indemnifying Constables and others acting in obedience to their warrants," shall be and is hereby declared to be in force with relation to such justice or justices so specially appointed as aforesaid, and to all acts done or performed by him or them, and to all constables or other peace officers acting under or by virtue of the authority of such justice or justices, as fully and effectually as if such justice or justices had been named in the said Act, and had been appointed as justices by virtue of the general commission of the peace.

31. And be it further enacted, that if any charge or complaint shall be made before any magistrate having special jurisdiction therein, by any employer against any apprenticed labourer in his employ, or by any apprenticed labourer against his employer, which charge or complaint shall prove in the judgment of such magistrate to be frivolous and vexatious, it shall and may be lawful for such magistrate to adjudge the party making such frivolous and vexatious complaint, if an apprenticed labourer, to work in the service of his employer for any extra time or times not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week; or if the employer of any apprenticed labourer be the complainant, such magistrate may adjudge such employer to the payment of a penalty in any sum not exceeding 10 l. current money to the use of the apprenticed labourer against whom he shall have made such frivolous and vexatious complaint; and if any charge or complaint which shall be made as aforesaid shall prove to be malicious, it shall and may be lawful for the magistrate before whom such charge or complaint shall have been brought, to adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to suffer imprisonment for any time not exceeding one calendar month; or if the complainant be the employer, to the payment of a penalty of any sum not exceeding 40 l. current money, to the use of the apprenticed labourer against whom he shall have made such malicious charge or complaint.

32. And be it further enacted, that every penalty and forfeiture incurred by virtue of this Act shall be levied and recovered (except in such cases as hereinbefore is excepted) in a summary summary manner by a warrant directed to the provost-marshal, or his lawful deputy, and issued under the hand and seal of any justice who shall be duly and specially authorized as hereinbefore is provided, to hear and determine offences against this Act; and such warrant shall be executed, and the property thereby taken in execution shall be sold, according to the form and manner, and subject to the rules and regulations which are now in force respecting proceedings had under writs of execution issuing out of the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, except that property may be taken in execution and sold by virtue of any process which shall issue under the authority of this Act, at any season of the year.

33. And be it further enacted, that when any person shall be convicted of any misdemeanor or other offence punishable under this Act, for which imprisonment may be by this Act awarded, it shall be lawful for the court or justice having jurisdiction therein, to sentence the offender to be imprisoned or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice whipped with any number of stripes not exceeding 30 in each whipping, in addition to such imprisonment, and if a female, to be once, or twice, or thrice confined in the stocks for any number of hours not exceeding eight in each confinement, in addition to such imprisonment; and also to direct that the offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for the whole or any portion or portions of such imprisonment, or of such imprisonment with hard labour.

34. And be it further enacted, that wherever words have been used in this Act, or in any Act which is now in force, or which may hereafter be enacted, importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, yet this or any other Act shall be understood to include several matters as well as one matter, and several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

35. And be it further enacted, that this Act shall take effect and come into operation on the 1st day of August, in the year of our Lord 1834.

No. 36. AN ACT to establish a Local Constabulary Force on the several Plantations in this Island. (31st July 1834.)

WHEREAS it is expedient that means should be taken to preserve peace and good order on the several plantations in this Island, by a constabulary force established and resident on the said plantations: Be it therefore enacted, by his Honor James Daniell, esquire, President, administering the government of this Island, and by the Council and Assembly of the same, that it shall and may be lawful for the proprietor or director of any plantation in this Island on which any body of labourers shall be settled, either as apprentices or otherwise, to appoint as local constables such of the said labourers, not exceeding two for every 100, as he shall think most trustworthy and eligible for such office; and such local constables shall be sworn by any judge or justice of peace to the due and faithful discharge of their duty, and shall be responsible for the tranquillity and good order of the plantation for which they shall respectively be appointed by the proprietor or director thereof, and shall be removable for misconduct or neglect, and shall moreover have power to act in all cases as ordinary and general constables; and each of the said local constables shall receive the same fees for the performance of his duties which other constables are by law entitled to, or may be entitled to receive, and shall also be supplied once in every year, at the public expense, with a uniform jacket of green cloth, with scarlet collar and cuffs, and a black glazed hat.

And be it further enacted, that every proprietor or director of a plantation shall from time to time return into the secretary's office a list of the names of such persons whom he shall appoint to be local constables, in manner aforesaid, on the plantation or estate belonging to him or under his control; and the secretary of this Island is hereby required to prepare from such returns a general list of such local constables, specifying the plantations to which they shall be respectively attached, and shall keep the same at all times suspended publicly in his office, upon pain of incurring a penalty of 5*l.* for neglecting so to do, which penalty shall be recovered in a summary manner before any two magistrates; and no local constable shall be competent to act in such capacity before his name shall be inserted in such general list.

And

And be it further enacted, that if any proprietor or director of any plantation shall omit or refuse to appoint and return such local constables in manner aforesaid, before the expiration of one week from and after the passing and publication of this Act, he shall incur a penalty for such his omission or neglect of 50*l.* current money, to be recovered by a warrant under the hands of any two magistrates, directed to the provost-marshal or his lawful deputy, requiring him to levy the same on the goods and chattels of the person in such case offending, two thirds of which penalty shall be paid into the public treasury for the public uses of this Island, and one third to the person who shall inform and sue for the same.

And be it further enacted, that this Act shall continue in force for the space of three years from and after the passing and publication thereof, and from thence until the expiration of the then sitting House of Assembly.

Virgin Islands:—Tortola.

AN ACT for regulating the division of Apprenticed Labourers into their respective Classes, and for providing for the dissolution of the Apprenticeship by Contract or otherwise.

Preamble.

WHEREAS by an Act made and passed in the 3d & 4th years of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things enacted, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who, in conformity to the laws now in force in the said Colonies respectively, shall, on or before the 1st day of August 1834, have been duly registered as slaves in any such Colony, and who on the 1st day of August 1834 shall be actually within such Colony, and who shall by such registry appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834 of the full age of six years or upwards, shall, by force and virtue of the above-recited Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or any other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers: provided, that for the purposes aforesaid every slave engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas shall be deemed and taken to be within the Colony to which such slaves shall belong, and that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer as would for the time being have been entitled to his or her services as a slave if such recited Act had not been made: And whereas by the 16th section of the said before-recited Act, it is amongst other things declared necessary, that various rules and regulations should be enacted for ascertaining, with reference to each apprenticed labourer within the said Colonies respectively, whether he or she belongs to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers; and for determining the manner and form in which, and the solemnities with which the discharging of any apprenticed labourer from such his or her apprenticeship, may be effected, either with or without, or in opposition, if necessary, to the consent of the person entitled to his or her services, and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services shall be made, and how and to whom the amount of such appraisement shall in each case be paid and applied, and in what manner and form, and to whom the discharge from any such apprenticeship shall thereupon be given, executed and recorded: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and in his absence, the chief officer administering the government of the said Virgin Islands, and the Council and Assembly of these Your Majesty's Virgin Islands, do humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained,

Apprenticed labourers to be divided into three distinct classes.
Mode of classification.

And be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that all persons who by virtue of the above-recited Act are about to become apprenticed labourers shall be divided into three distinct classes; the first of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners; the second, to prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes: provided always, that no person of the age of 12 years shall be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall, for 12 calendar months previous to the 28th day of August 1833, have been usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or in the performance of any other work or labour necessary to be done or performed, or connected with the business of any estate or plantation, whether as mechanics, boatmen, watchmen, messengers, stock-keepers, or otherwise.

Clause 2. Owners of slaves to make a return of the number, age and usual occupation of such slaves to the assistant commissioners.

Form of return to be sworn to, and where to be lodged.

And be it further enacted, that in order to designate and make it appear with certainty to what particular class each such apprenticed labourer doth actually belong, that previously to the 1st day of August 1834, every owner or possessor of any slave or slaves within the Virgin Islands, or some person authorized in his, her or their behalf, shall make a return to the assistant commissioners appointed by virtue of the said Act of Parliament of all such slaves, mentioning in separate columns in each such return the name or names of the owner or owners, the names, ages, or reputed ages, and usual occupations of all such slaves, which return shall be headed "Return of Slaves belonging to, or in the possession of, A. B., this day of 1834:" and each person making any such return shall be sworn by any one of the said commissioners to an affidavit to be thereunder written, in the following words: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear, that the return now by me made is just and true, and the distinctions correspond with the occupations usually pursued by each of the slaves contained therein for 12 calendar months next preceding the 28th day of August 1833. So help me God." Which return shall be delivered to the said commissioners; and that the commissioners before whom such affidavit shall be sworn to shall, at the time of swearing, certify a counterpart of such return and affidavit to be produced to him by the person making the same to be a true and correct copy, which copy shall on or before the said 1st day of August 1834 be delivered to one of the special justices of these Islands, to be by him kept, and produced, when necessarily required, before any lawful tribunal in these Islands.

Clause 3. Persons may discharge their apprenticed labourers before the expiration of the term, to be signed before two witnesses, and duly recorded.

And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful, at any time before the expiration of the term mentioned in the before-recited statute of the 3d & 4th William the Fourth, for the duration of the apprenticeship, for the person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer, to discharge him, her or them from such apprenticeship: provided always, that such discharge shall be in writing, and signed in the presence of two competent witnesses, and such deed shall, either at the instance of the employer or apprentice, be recorded in the secretary's office in these Islands; and after such discharge shall be so recorded, the employer or apprentice shall be relieved from all responsibility that by law might or did exist between, or in relation to, any or either of them previously to the recording of such discharge or release.

Clause 4. Cannot discharge them if of the age of 50, or diseased, without being liable to provide for them until the end of the term.

And be it further enacted, that if any person so discharged from such apprenticeship by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any disease, or mental or bodily infirmity, as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom.

Clause 5. Apprenticed labourers may purchase their discharge without consent, or in opposition to their employers; value of services to be appraised.

And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any such apprenticed labourer to purchase his or her discharge from such apprenticeship without consent, or in opposition, if necessary, to the will of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, upon payment to such person or persons of the appraised value of such services, which appraisement shall be effected, and which purchase-money shall be paid and applied, and which discharge shall be given and executed in such manner and form, and upon and subject to the conditions as shall be hereinafter prescribed.

Clause 6. In case the employer refuses to effect the discharge of apprentice on tender of the value of services, or be unable so to do, must appear before the special magistrate to show cause.

And, to provide for the discharge of such apprentice, where the employer of such apprentice may be unable or unwilling to contract for such discharge, Be it further enacted, that where the employer of such apprentice, or any person or persons representing such employer, or the heirs or executors of such employer, or assigns of such employer having possession of such apprentice, shall refuse to contract with or effect the discharge of such apprentice or apprentices, upon tender to him made of the full value of the future services of such apprentice or apprentices, in good current gold and silver money of these Islands; or shall, by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease or charge upon or interest in the labour of such apprentice or apprentices being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to effect a valid discharge; or if the employer, or any person having an interest in the labour of such apprentice or apprentices, be a minor or married woman, lunatic or idiot; or if the employer of such apprentice shall be absent from these Islands without having any attorney or representative, or shall not be known; or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of these Islands, wherein the title to the labour of the said apprentice, or the right to his or her services shall or may be in controversy; or where such employer, by means of any entry of actions or judgment obtained against him, may be debarred by law from disposing of any personal personal property, in all or any such cases the special justice of the district to which the said apprentice or apprentices shall be attached, upon application to him made by such apprentice or apprentices, shall cause the employer, reputed employer or possessor of such apprentice or apprentices, to be summoned to appear before him, producing the said apprentice or apprentices, at any time being not less than 10 days from the time of such summons, and then and there to show cause wherefore he refused to accept value for the said apprentice or apprentices, and discharge him, her or them accordingly.

Clause 7. If he can prove to the satisfaction of such justice that such apprentice has been guilty of theft or felony, or receiver of stolen goods, or a runaway, the justice may stay proceedings, and enter the same in his journal.

And be it further enacted, that if the employer, reputed employer or possessor of such apprentice or apprentices, shall appear and show, to the satisfaction of the said justice, by means of one or more credible witness or witnesses, that the said apprentice wishing to purchase his or her discharge, has or had, at any time since his or her said apprenticeship, been guilty of any theft, larceny, or any crime or felony, or being knowingly, wilfully or wittingly the receiver of any stolen goods, or that the money to be paid by such apprentice as the price of his or her discharge, or any part thereof, was or has been dishonestly or fraudulently acquired, or if it shall be proven that the said apprentice has run away or absented himself or herself from the services of his or her employer or possessor for upwards of 20 days at one or several times during his or her said apprenticeship, or have been convicted of harbouring any other runaway apprentice, then in all or any such case or cases, it shall be incumbent on such special justice to stay further proceedings, and enter the same in his journal, which entry shall debar all further proceedings for the compulsory discharge of such apprentice or apprentices.

Clause 8. If he is unable to effect it by reason of the right being vested in other persons, or otherwise, chief justice may summon all persons before him to prefer such claim.

And be it further enacted, that in case any employer, or other person having any interest in the labour of such apprentice, shall be unwilling to effect his or her discharge, or shall by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease or charge upon or interest in the labour of such apprentice being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge of such apprentice; or if the employer, or any other person having charge upon or interest in the labour of such apprentice, shall be a minor or married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or shall be absent from these Islands, or shall not be known; or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in these Islands, wherein the right to the services of such apprentice may be in controversy; or if the employer of any such apprentice shall demand as a price for his or her discharge a greater sum of money than may appear to the said special justice to be the fair and just value of his or her future services, then and in each and every case as aforesaid the chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas, on application to him for that purpose made by such special justice, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer or possessor of such apprentice to appear before him by themselves or their agents, at some convenient time and place to be in such such summons for that purpose appointed; and notice shall be published by the said special justice, by affixing the same to the court-house door of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid; and in such notice all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to the labour of such apprentice proposed to be discharged, either in their own right or as the agents, guardians, attorney, trustees or representative of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claim.

Clause 9. On attendance the chief justice, in presence of the special justice, may hear in a summary way parties refusing, or unable from any cause to comply, Appraisers to be nominated, and how.

And be it further enacted, that at the time appointed for such meeting as aforesaid, the said chief justice, in the presence of such special justice, and also in the presence of the employer, if the apprentice so proposed to be discharged, or his agent or manager, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer, or his agent or manager, shall proceed to hear, in a summary way, what may be alleged by the said special justice, or by the employer or his agent or manager, or other person claiming interest in the labour of the said apprentice so proposed to be discharged, and attending in pursuance of any such notice; and in case the said parties, or any of them, shall refuse to effect such discharge at a price approved by such special justice, or in case it shall be made to appear to the said chief justice that a valid and legal discharge of such apprentice cannot be effected by private contract, or that the employer or person entitled to the services of such apprentice, or any person having any charge upon or interest therein, is a minor or married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or is absent from these Islands, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice in these Islands, wherein the title to the future services of such apprentice is in controversy, then and in every such case the chief justice shall require the said special justice, and the employer or person representing such employer, if attending in pursuance to notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of the future services of such apprentice, and such chief justice shall nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer, or his or her representative, shall fail to attend, or attending shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said chief justice shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser in behalf of such owner or manager.

Clause 10. Appraisers to be sworn by the chief justice to make a fair and impartial appraisement, taking into consideration the qualities of the apprentice. Appraisement to be recorded.

And be it further enacted, that the appraisers to be nominated as aforesaid shall be duly sworn by and before the said chief justice to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the future services of such apprentice, taking into their consideration the qualities of the apprentice so proposed to be discharged, as well as his or her skill in any trade, domestic service or employment, or other labour whatsoever, with any other facts which, in the opinion of such appraisers, ought to influence them, or either of them, in their judgment, and within four days after such their appointment such appraisers shall make a joint valuation to the said chief justice under their hands and seals; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said chief justice within the said four days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall, within the next succeeding four days, certify the valuation of the said future services of such apprentice to the said chief justice; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or, on their default, by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and enrolled amongst the records of the said Court of Common Pleas of these Islands: provided nevertheless, that if the amount of such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned, within 10 days next after the enrolment thereof, such enrolment shall be cancelled; and it shall not be lawful for such apprentice, or for the said special justice in behalf of such apprentice, again to institute proceedings as before mentioned for his or her discharge.

Clause 11. Chief justice to pay out of the monies supplied by the apprentice the appraised value to the employer, taking a receipt, which must be enrolled in the records of the Court of Common Pleas; or if the person entitled is absent, or has no legal attorney, or not known, the appraised value to be paid into the public treasury, to be held until the chief justice thinks fit to make an order when the money must be paid.

And be it further enacted, that upon or within 12 days from the date of such enrolment of the valuation aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said special justice, out of the monies supplied to him for that purpose by the apprentice proposed to be discharged, to pay the employer or person entitled to receive the same the appraised value of the services of such apprentice, taking a receipt in writing from such employer or other person entitled to receive the same; and the chief justice shall, upon application to him made by such special justice, make an order for the enrolment of the said receipt in the records of the Court of Common Pleas; and the said chief justice shall by such order further proceed to declare and adjudge that the apprentice by or in behalf of whom such money hath been paid is discharged, and such apprentice shall be deemed free and exonerated from all claims upon him by or in behalf of such employer or employers, for or in behalf or in virtue of his former apprenticeship: provided always, that when the person entitled to the services of such apprentice shall be absent from these Islands, and having no legal attorney or representative therein, or shall not be known, or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice for these Islands, wherein the right to his or her future services may be in controversy, or where the person entitled to receive the same shall refuse to give the necessary receipt, then and in all such cases it shall be lawful for the said special justice to pay the said appraised value into the public treasury of these Islands; and the treasurer's receipt for the same shall be sufficient for the purpose herein intended and provided; and the said treasurer shall hold the said money, subject to such order as the chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas for these Islands may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make; and such money shall by such treasurer be paid and disposed of in pursuance of and in obedience to any such order.

Clause 12. Council and Assembly to fix a moderate scale of fees.

And be it further enacted, that the Council and Assembly for these Islands shall establish a moderate and reasonable table of fees and expenses to be paid and secured in the proceedings, for the compulsory discharge of any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid.

Clause 13. By whom expenses to be paid.

And be it further enacted, that if any such appraisement as aforesaid shall have been rendered necessary by any difference of opinion between such special justice and the employer or employers, or his, or her, or their agent or agents, respecting the price to be paid for the apprentice proposed to be discharged, the expense of such appraisement shall be borne by such apprentice, and be added to the amount of the valuation if the services of such apprentice shall be appraised at a sum exceeding or equal to the price demanded by such employer or his agent, or exceeding the sum offered by such apprentice, or by such special justice in his or her behalf, as the price of his or her discharge; but in case the appraised value shall be less than the price previously demanded by his or her employer, or the agent of such employer, then the expense of such appraisement shall be wholly borne by such employer; and in case any such appraisement should have been rendered necessary by any other cause than a difference of opinion as to the price to be paid for the discharge of such apprentice, the expense of such appraisement shall be equally divided between such apprentice and his or her employer or employers.

Clause 14. Chief justice to make, from time to time, rules and regulations necessary for the jurisdiction hereby in him vested.

And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas to make and prescribe, and from time to time revoke and alter, as occasion may require, all such rules and orders as may and shall be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction hereby in him vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to, or interested in, any question so depending before him.

Clause 15. This Act to be deemed and taken as a Public Act.

And be it further enacted, that this Act shall be deemed, taken and received as a general Act, and all persons to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Virgin Islands: Tortola.

AN ACT prescribing the Duties of Apprenticed Labourers and Employers respectively, and imposing Penalties for the non-performance thereof, and providing other Regulations for the maintenance of Good Order.

Preamble.

WHEREAS by an Act made and passed in the 3d & 4th years of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things enacted, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who, in conformity to the laws now in force in the said Colonies respectively, shall, on or before the 1st day of August 1834, have been duly registered as slaves in any such Colony, shall by force and virtue of the above-recited Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers; and by the second section of the said recited Act it is provided, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer, such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer as would for the time being have been entitled to his or her services as a slave if such recited Act had not been made:

And whereas by the 16th section of said before-recited Act it hath been submitted, amongst other things, to the several and respective Colonial Legislatures to frame, conformably with the said Act, certain laws and regulations intended for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence or neglect, or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer, and for enforcing the due performance, by any such apprenticed labourer, of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter for any hired services during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer, and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers, and for the prevention and punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of such apprenticed labourer injuring, or tending to the injury of the property of such employer, and also for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance to the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourer, and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourer from any of these Islands to which they may respectively belong:

And whereas it is also necessary, for the protection of such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, that various laws should be framed and enacted for regulating the supply of food and clothing, medicine and medical attendance, and for securing punctuality in the distribution thereof; and also to secure to the prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment, for their own benefit, of that portion of their time during which they are not hereinafter required to labour in the service of their respective employers; and also that provision should be made for regulating the imposition of task work; and also that regulations should be made respecting any voluntary contract, and for limiting the period of time to which such voluntary contract may extend; and it is also necessary that regulation should be made for the prevention and punishment of cruelty, injustice, or other wrongs or injury which may be done to or inflicted upon any such apprenticed labourer by persons entitled to their services, and that a variety of other regulations should be made relating to such apprenticed labourer, conducive to the peace and good order of society: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Governor and Commander-in-chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and in his absence the chief officer administering the government of the said Virgin Islands, and the Council and Assembly of the said Virgin Islands, do humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted, Clause 1. Punishment for apprenticed labourers absenting themselves from their employer's service.

And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that for every hour in which any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself, herself or themselves from his or her or their employer's service without just and reasonable cause, he, she or they shall be compelled to serve in such service two extra hours: provided always, that such extra hours which he, she or they shall be compelled to serve as aforesaid, shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week.

Clause 2. If more than 7½ hours in one week, to be adjudged a deserter.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer so absenting himself, herself or themselves from his, her or their employer's service as aforesaid for more than seven hours and a half in any one week, shall be adjudged a deserter, and he, she or they respectively shall, upon conviction, be adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, at the discretion of the special justice to whom such offender shall be reported.

Clause 3. If for more than 2 days in one week, to be adjudged a vagabond.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer so absenting himself, herself or themselves from their employer's service as aforesaid for two days in any one week, shall be adjudged a vagabond; and he, she or they shall, upon conviction, be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, with whipping not exceeding 15 stripes, or to either or both such punishments, at the discretion of the special justice to whom such offender or offenders shall be reported.

Clause 4. If for 6 days in succession, adjudged a runaway, and punishment.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer so absenting himself, herself or themselves as aforesaid from his, her or their employer's service for six days in succession, shall be adjudged a runaway; and he, she or they shall, upon conviction, be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to whipping not exceeding 30 stripes, or to either or both of such punishments, at the discretion of the special justice to whom such offender or offenders shall be reported.

Clause 5. If the said apprentice performs his work indolently, carelessly or negligently, punishment thereof.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall perform his work indolently, carelessly or negligently, shall, upon conviction, for the first offence, be adjudged to work in his, her or their employer's service for any extra time not exceeding 15 hours in any one week, and for the second offence to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, and for the third or any subsequent offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, with whipping not exceeding 20 stripes.

Clause 6. Injuring or endangering the property of employer, or not preventing others, punishment thereof.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who by the careless use of fire shall injure or endanger the property of his, her or their employer, or the property of any person or persons, or who shall in any manner, or by any means, wantonly or wilfully injure any of the property of his, her or their employers, or the property of any other person or persons, or shall permit such property to be injured by any other person or persons, he, she or they having the power to prevent the same, or shall neglect to report any such injury done to any such property to his, her or their employer, or the representative of such employer, he, she or they shall, upon conviction, be adjudged to extra labour in his, her or their employer's service for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30, or to one or more of any such punishments, at the discretion of the special justice to whom such offender or offenders shall be reported.

Clause 7. Neglecting, ill-using or injuring any cattle, or other live stock, liable to the punishments last aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall injure, neglect or ill-use any cattle or other live stock intrusted to his, her or their care by his, her or their employer, or the representative of such employer, or shall, by wilful negligence, expose such cattle or other live stock, or any other property of his, her or their employer, or representative of such employer, or of any other person or persons intrusted by such employer or such representative to his, her or their care, to any damage or injury, he, she or they shall, upon conviction, be adjudged, at the discretion of the special justice to whom he, she or they shall be reported, to any one or more of the punishments last aforesaid.

Clause 8. Disobeying the lawful commands of their employer, liable as aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful command of his, her or their employer, shall, upon conviction, be adjudged, at the discretion of the special justice to whom he, she or they shall be reported, to any one or more of the punishments last aforesaid.

Clause 9. Three or more agreeing to make resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, guilty of conspiracy, to imprisonment for six months.

And be it further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of his, her or their employer, such apprenticed labourers so agreeing together shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall, upon conviction before any special justice to whom they shall be reported, be severally adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding six months, with whipping not exceeding 39 stripes.

Clause 10. If engaged in open and combined resistance to the lawful commands of employer, adjudged to imprisonment last aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, that any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall be engaged in combined and open disobedience or resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, shall, upon conviction before any special justice to whom they shall be reported, be severally adjudged to the punishments last aforesaid, or any one of them.

Clause 11. If in a state of drunkenness, or found fighting, or conducting themselves in an insubordinate manner, punishment thereof.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself, herself or themselves in an insolent and insubordinate manner towards his, her or their employer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his, or her, or their labour, for every such offence shall be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding one week, or to whipping not exceeding 25 stripes, or to either or both such punishments, at the discretion of the special justice to whom he, she or they shall be reported.

Clause 12. Apprenticed labourer harbouring any runaway apprenticed labourer, or lodging same, and on employer's estate, liable

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall harbour any runaway apprenticed labourer, or shall lodge, entertain or encourage any person or persons on the estate or premises of his, her or their employer contrary to the direction of such employer, shall, on conviction, be subject and liable to any one or more of the punishments last aforesaid.

Clause 13. Taking up a residence in any house, &c. occupied by apprenticed labourers, or on his employer's estate without permission of such, and shall refuse or neglect to quit on being required, or found quarrelling with said labourers, punishment thereof.

And be it further enacted, that any person or persons whomsoever who shall take up a permanent or temporary residence or abode in any house or hut occupied by any apprenticed labourer on any estate, plantation or premises of the employer of such apprenticed labourer, without having first obtained permission in writing from such employer, or other person having the immediate care, management or possession of such estate, plantation or premises, or shall refuse or neglect to quit such house or hut, or estate, plantation or premises, on being required to do so by any such employer, or other person having the immediate care, management or possession thereof; or shall be found thereon quarrelling with any of the apprenticed labourers, such person or persons shall, if an apprenticed labourer, on conviction before any special justice, be adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding four weeks; and if other person than an apprenticed labourer shall be so convicted, he, she or or they shall respectively be fined in any sum not exceeding 40 s., or in default of payment committed to the common gaol for any time not exceeding one month: provided always, that no such consent or permission shall be refused to any person of good character having a wife or husband on any such estate or plantation, if asked for in a proper manner, which permission shall be enjoyed at proper times so long as he or she shall conduct himself or herself in a proper manner.

Clause 14. Three or more apprenticed labourers uniting in any riot or tumultuous assembly, manner of dispersing the same.

And be it further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assembly, any justice of the peace for these Islands who shall be present, or the manager, overseer or other person having the charge or direction of any estate or plantation, or any other person, shall, in case he can make himself heard, desire all persons there present to separate and disperse quietly, or shall cause a white flag, if in the daytime, or if at night, shall fire a musket or pistol, as a warning, and all persons who at the expiration of five minutes from such desire to disperse, or the exhibition of such flag, or the firing of such musket or pistol, shall continue present at such riotous assembly, shall, if an apprenticed labourer, on conviction before any special justice, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months; or if any person other than an apprenticed labourer shall be convicted before any justice of the peace of these Islands of being present at such riotous or tumultuous assembly, and shall not disperse as hereinbefore required, such person so convicted shall be fined at the discretion of such justice of the peace in any sum not exceeding 5 l., or in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

Clause 15. No apprenticed labourer to reside beyond the district he resided in at the time this Act came into operation, without permission of his employer, nor to go beyond without a written pass.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall reside beyond the limits of the district in which he or she may be resident at the time this Act shall come into operation, unless either by the consent in writing of his or her employer, and any labourer found beyond the limits of such district, except in his or her way to and from market, or to or from some place of public worship, and not having with him or her a written pass for that purpose from his or her employer, he or she shall be liable to be apprehended and detained until he or she can be conveniently conveyed before any special justice, and such person so apprehended shall, upon conviction, be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly.

Clause 16. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself 7 days or upwards from his employer's service deemed a runaway; punishment.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall for seven days or upwards absent himself from his or her employer's service without reasonable cause, shall, upon conviction before the special justice, be adjudged a runaway, and shall be sentenced to three months imprisonment with hard labour, or to any part of such imprisonment with hard labour, together with whipping not exceeding 39 stripes.

Clause 17. Labourers establishing themselves as a distinct community, neglecting the duties imposed by this Act, to be dislodged, and habitations and grounds destroyed; punishment.

And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any special justice that any apprenticed labourers have, without lawful authority, established themselves in any part of these Islands as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon him, her or them under and by virtue of this or any other Act of these Islands, such justice shall cause any such community to be dislodged, and, if necessary, shall cause their habitation to be taken down and removed, and provision ground and cultivation destroyed; and any apprenticed labourer convicted of having been a member of such community shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months, or to whipping not exceeding 39 stripes, or to both such punishments, at the discretion of the special justice before whom such offender shall be taken.

Clause 18. During martial law no apprentice to leave the estate without a pass, except such appointed to any duty or service.

And be it further enacted, that on proclamation of martial law in these Islands, no prædial apprenticed labourers, excepting such only as shall be appointed to the performance of any duty or service, shall, during day or night, leave the estate or plantation to which he, she or they may respectively be attached, without having a written pass from his, her or their employer, and any such apprentice found off the estate or plantation to which they may respectively be attached during the continuance of such martial law, and not having such written pass, may be apprehended and lodged in gaol, and shall be punished, on conviction before any special justice, by confinement with hard labour for one week, or by whipping with 15 stripes, or both.

Clause 19. No apprentice to keep any horse or horned cattle, &c. on any estate without permission, otherwise to be dealt with as if in trespass.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall graze, pasture or keep on the estate or plantation of his, her or their employer, or on the lands or premises of any other person or persons whomsoever, any horned cattle, horse, mare, gelding, sheep, hog or goat, without having first obtained the written permission of such employer or other person by whom such land or premises may be possessed; and in such written permission shall be expressed the number and description of any such cattle, horses, or other live stock he, she or they may be permitted to keep as aforesaid, and for what time and on what terms the same are to be kept; and any cattle, horse, mare, gelding, sheep, hog or goat kept by or found in the possession of any apprenticed labourer on such estate, plantation or lands as aforesaid, without he, she or they having first obtained such written permission as aforesaid, or kept, fed or pastured otherwise than according to the terms therein expressed, such cattle, horse or other stock, shall be dealt with in the same manner and subject to the same penalties as cattle, horses or other stock caught trespassing are subject and liable to under and by virtue of a certain Act of these Islands, intituled, "An Act for appointing Pound-keepers, and for the more effectually preventing and regulating Trespasses, and to repeal an Act for regulating Trespasses."

Clause 20. Any apprentice quitting these Islands, liable to imprisonment at the discretion of the special justice, not to extend to such in the personal attendance of their employers.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer quitting or attempting to quit these or any one of these Islands to which he, she or they shall be respectively attached, shall, upon conviction, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding three months, at the discretion of any special justice before whom such offender shall be taken; provided nothing herein shall prevent, or be taken or deemed to prevent such apprentices going from one of these Islands to another within this government, in the personal attendance on his or her employer, or with a written pass from such employer as aforesaid.

Clause 21. In order to prevent the escape of such apprentices, no boat or other craft to anchor in any of the out-bays or creeks after sunset, except by stress of weather. How to be dealt with.

And in order the more effectually to prevent the escape of apprenticed labourers, Be it also enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any craft or boat of any description whatever, not belonging to any such place, to enter or anchor in any of the out-bays, creeks or inlets thereof, or to haul up any boat on the beach or sea-shore of any such place after sunset, unless going there on particular and lawful business, or compelled to enter by stress of weather or the appearance of danger, in either of which cases a report of such entry, and the cause thereof, shall be made with the least possible delay to the owner, manager, or other person resident on and having the care and direction of the estate or plantation, or other lands forming such bays, creeks or inlets; neither shall it be lawful for any craft or boat so entering to depart before the rising of the sun on the next morning, nor until such owner, manager or other person as above mentioned shall have an opportunity of examining and searching such craft or boat, which it shall be lawful for such person so to do; and if any craft or boat of any description shall after sunset anchor or be hauled up at any such place, having no such cause as above mentioned, or having any such cause, shall depart before the rising of the sun on the following morning, or without making such report, or shall avoid, prevent or resist the making of any such search, every such craft or boat shall be subject and liable to confiscation, and may be seized at any time by any person whatever, and delivered with an affidavit of the facts sworn to before any justice of the peace, to the treasurer of these Islands, who shall sell such craft or boat, paying to the person making such seizure one-third of the net proceeds thereof, and retaining the other two thirds to be applied by him to the use of the public of the said Islands; and any person on board of such craft or boat at the time of any such unlawful act as aforesaid, if an apprenticed labourer, shall, on conviction before any special justice, be adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding three months, or to whipping not exceeding 25 stripes; and if any person other than an apprenticed labourer, he shall, on conviction before any justice of the peace of these Islands, be fined in any sum not exceeding 10 l., to to be recovered and applied in like manner as other penalties are in and by this Act directed.

Clause 22. Any persons removing, or assisting to remove, any such apprentice to be fined, and if the offender be an apprentice, to be imprisoned.

And be it further enacted, that all or any person or persons whomsoever removing or assisting to remove any apprenticed labourer from any of these Islands, in any boat or vessel, such person or persons shall, upon conviction before any of His Majesty's justices of the peace of these Islands, be fined in any sum not less than 10 l. nor exceeding 100 l., and in default of payment, to imprisonment not less than one or exceeding six months; and if such offender shall be an apprenticed labourer, he or she shall, upon conviction before any special justice, be adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months.

Clause 23. Any such apprentice committing any offence against any Acts which would subject any other person to pecuniary fines, to be imprisoned, &c. according to the nature of the offence.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall commit any offence against any Act of these Islands which subjects other persons to pecuniary fines, such apprenticed labourer shall for any such offence or offences be taken before any special justice of these Islands, who shall upon conviction adjudge him, her or them to imprisonment with hard labour according to the nature of the offence, and the extent of the penalty imposed on other persons so offending by any such Act or Acts as aforesaid.

Clause 24. No such labourer exempt from liability to indictment, &c. which other persons are liable to, but not to be liable both under this Act and also under such law.

And be it further enacted, that nothing herein contained shall exempt any apprenticed labourer from his, her or their liability to any indictment, prosecutions or actions as other persons may be subject or liable to in respect to any act or acts by him, her or them done, or as accessory either before or after the fact, or for any other matter or thing for which any other person or persons would be liable to be sued, prosecuted or indicted; provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to be sued or prosecuted both under and by virtue of this Act, and under such general law as aforesaid.

Clause 25. Any person who shall harbour, entertain, &c. any such apprentice away from his employer's service, to be fined and imprisoned, also liable to the action of the employer for damages.

And be it further enacted, that any person not being an apprenticed labourer, who shall harbour, entertain or encourage any runaway apprenticed labourer, or shall inveigle, entice or persuade any apprenticed labourer from his, her or their employer's service, shall, upon conviction before any justice of the peace for these Islands, be fined in any sum not exceeding 20 l. or less than 5 l., and in default of payment shall be committed to the common gaol for any time not exceeding three months, at the discretion of the justice before whom he, she or they shall be convicted, and shall moreover be subject to the action of the employer of such apprenticed labourer for damages.

Clause 26. All such apprentices adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour to work for 10 hours in each day, no one to converse with them, except by permission of the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that all persons who shall be adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour shall be compelled to work for 10 hours in each day, and shall when not so engaged, or when such hard labour shall be performed within doors, be kept in close confinement; and any person not being a prisoner or gaoler, shall not be permitted to have access to or converse with them, unless by permission of such special justice; and should any such person so adjudged evince a refractory spirit, or escape or attempt to escape, or show a disposition thereto, it shall be lawful for such special justice to order and direct such person to be worked in irons, or otherwise so secured as such justice may in his discretion deem necessary.

And

And be it further enacted, that no woman shall be subject to the punishment of whipping for any offence by her committed, but in all cases in this Act where that punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying to the cases of males only; and that all offences, in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any such male offender, shall, when committed by females, be punished by solitary confinement or any other punishment, at the discretion of such special justice.

Clause 27. No woman to be subject to the punishment of whipping, and for any offence which would subject a male to it, to be imprisoned in solitary confinement, &c. at the discretion of the special justice.

And be it also enacted, that when any apprenticed labourer shall be sentenced to confinement with hard labour, in order to save the expense of gaol fees and of feeding, by which the confinement might be prolonged, and to obviate the difficulty of enforced labour if such confinement should be in the public gaol, the same may take place, by order of the special justice trying the offender, upon the estate or plantation to which any such apprentice is attached or employed, the confinement to be during the intervals of relaxation from labour, to be fixed by such justice at the time of trial; and if any apprenticed labourer shall be imprisoned by the sentence of any such special justice, or by virtue of any judgment of court at any other place than the estate or plantation to which he or she is attached or employed on, the employer of such apprentice shall not be liable for any expenses incurred by such apprentice, nor shall any such apprentice be entitled to any provision or supply of food from his or her employer during the time such apprentice shall be absent from his or her employer's service: provided nevertheless, that if any such employer shall at the time of passing of any such sentence be indebted to any such apprentice in any sum for wages, for hired services or otherwise, the same shall at all times be applicable, in a regular course, to the payment of any such expenses or sum of money, for the payment whereof such apprenticed labourer shall be liable, so far as the same will go, to be ordered at the time of trial.

Clause 28. Any such apprentice sentenced to confinement with hard labour in the public gaol, in order to save expenses, may be confined on the estate; if not tried on the estate, employer not liable to any expenses.

And be it further enacted, that the employer or renter of any estate or plantation having prædial apprenticed labourers attached thereto, shall provide for such labourers all such medicine and medical attendance as shall be necessary; and that the medical attendant shall insert in a book, to be kept on such estate, whether employed by the year or otherwise, every visit by him paid; and if any patient shall be labouring under any dangerous or severe illness, he shall also insert in the said book the nature thereof, and his prescription of any particular kind of food or nourishment for such patients.

Clause 29. Employer of such apprentices to provide medicine and medical attendance; book to be kept, and manner of such attendance to be inserted, also the nature of the diseases, medicine, food, &c. prescribed.

And be it further enacted, that all prædial apprenticed labourers being ill, or complaining of being ill, shall immediately report himself or herself to the employer or chief superintendent; and should any such apprenticed labourer neglect so to report himself or herself to his or her employer, or his or her chief superintendent, such apprenticed labourer shall, for any time which he or she shall be absent from work and not so reported, on conviction be adjudged guilty of being absent from his or her employer's service, and dealt with accordingly.

Clause 30. Apprentices when sick must report such to the employer; neglecting so to do, and being absent, shall be so adjudged and dealt with accordingly.

And be it further enacted, that should any such apprenticed labourer at any time during the day or night, from the time of his being admitted into the hospital or sick-house on any estate or plantation, leave or absent himself or herself therefrom without having obtained the consent of his or her employer, or his or her chief superintendent so to do, he, she or they shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of disobedience of the orders of his, her or their employer, and punished accordingly.

Clause 31. Any such apprentice leaving the hospital without consent of employer, guilty of disobedience of orders, and dealt with accordingly.

And be it further enacted, that every employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer within these Islands shall weekly and every week give or cause to be given to each prædial apprenticed labourer in his, her or their service or employ, a sufficient quantity of good and wholesome food, that is to say, to each of the prædial apprenticed labourers above the age of 12 years, two pounds of salted provision, or four pounds of fresh fish and six pints of corn or beans or peas, or four pints of wheat or rye flour, or six pints of Indian corn meal, or four pints of oatmeal, or four pints of rice, or six pounds of cassava bread or farine, or six pounds of biscuit, or 20 pounds of yams, potatoes or other esculent roots, or 15 pounds of plantains or bananas; and to each of the other prædial apprentices such sufficient quantity, in the same proportion as the employer shall think proper, according to the different labour, size, strength, age or otherwise of such apprentice or apprentices: provided always, that every aged, infirm or sickly prædial apprentice being pronounced by the medical practitioner of any such prædial apprenticed labourer, or of the estate or plantation to which he, she or they shall be attached, as being incapable, by means of such age, infirmity or sickness, of labour, such prædial apprenticed labourer shall weekly and every week receive a full ratio of allowances as aforesaid, or such other nourishment and allowance as shall be requisite and necessary; all which provisions and nourishment shall be of good and wholesome quality.

Clause 32. Employer of such apprentices to give weekly, and every week, a sufficient quantity of good and wholesome food; provided, that when any such are pronounced incapable of labour from sickness or other cause to receive a full ratio of allowances.

And be it further enacted, that such allowance as aforesaid shall be given to the full extent only to such prædial apprenticed labourers (not being aged, infirm or sickly) who shall be absolutely engaged in the service, and working for such employer for the full time directed and allowed by law for such labourer to work in the service of such employer, for each week, and in proportion for any part or portion of such time such labourer shall have been for the preceding six days employed in his, her or their employer's service.

Clause 33. Full extent of allowance to be given only to such apprentices absolutely engaged and working in the service of their employer.

And be it further enacted, that every employer shall have the option of feeding such prædial apprentice or apprentices (except aged, infirm or sickly apprentices) to the first extent as hereinbefore directed, or of allotting to him, her or them a sufficient portion of land,

Clause 34. Every employer shall have the option of feeding to the full extent beforementioned, or of land, properly adapted for the growth of provisions, for the purpose of cultivation, not being less than one quarter of an acre for each such apprentice, and not more than two miles from the place of residence of the apprentices on any estate or plantation to which they may be attached, which shall be deemed taken and considered as equivalent and in lieu of the one half part of the farinaceous food, or esculent roots, or vegetables hereinbefore directed to be given to each such prædial apprentice weekly: provided always, that such portion of land, so allotted to the said apprentice or apprentices for cultivation, shall not be resumed or taken back during the term of such apprenticeship by such employer, until six months previous notice is given to such apprentice or apprentices, to enable him, her or them to reap any crop or crops planted therein; and on such notice being given, either other good and sufficient land shall be apportioned or attached to the said apprentice or apprentices in the same proportion as aforesaid, or the full weekly allowance hereinbefore directed shall be given and allowed.

Clause 35. To allow one day, comprising 7 ½ hours, for the purpose of cultivating such provision ground, and for every neglect to allowance regularly, for each and every day shall forfeit 1*s.* 6*d.*

And be it further enacted, that on all such estates or plantations when such land shall be allotted to such prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, it shall be optional with the employer of such apprentice or apprentices (not being aged, infirm or sickly,) to allow one day, comprising 7 ½ hours, of the time directed and allowed by law for such prædial apprenticed labourer to work in the service of his, her or their employer in each and every week, to each and every such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, for the purpose of cultivating such provision ground so apportioned as aforesaid, and such day shall be deemed, taken and considered as equivalent for such allowance of such farinaceous food, or esculent roots, or vegetables; and every such employer shall for every such apprentice which he, she or they shall neglect or refuse to allowance weekly as aforesaid, or for any day, or any portion of such day so given and allowed as an equivalent for such weekly allowance of farinaceous food, or esculent roots, or vegetables, which he, she or they shall withhold from any such apprentice, or for neglect or refusal to supply such other nourishment and allowance which shall or may be ordered for the aged, infirm or sickly by such medical practitioner in attendance thereon, or shall share out damaged or unwholesome food, shall, on conviction before the special justice, pay for each and every apprentice so neglected to be allowanced or provided for, or to whom such unwholesome food shall be shared, or for each and every day, or any part of such day, so withheld as aforesaid, the sum of 1*s.* 6*d.*, to be recovered and applied in manner hereinafter provided, as in case of non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in contract for task-work or extra services.

Clause 36. Such is not to prevent the employer from employing such apprentice on the day allotted to him, provided he gives an equivalent before the end of the ensuing week.

And be it further enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed, taken or construed to prevent any employer from employing such apprenticed labourers, or any part of them, on such day as aforesaid, or any part thereof, in his, her or their service, provided he, she or they shall give to such apprentice an equivalent for such day, or any part thereof, in time or otherwise, before the end of the next ensuing week: and provided always, that in case of any unforeseen circumstance preventing such employer from receiving any allowance to be distributed as aforesaid, he, she or they may give to such apprenticed labourers a day in lieu thereof, or any other matter or thing which such apprenticed labourer, or the justice, shall deem equivalent to such allowance.

Clause 37. Every employer shall provide and give a proper allowance of clothing. Quantity of such.

And be it further enacted, that every employer shall once in every year provide for and give to each and every male adult prædial apprenticed labourer under his, her or their care, or in his ,her or their employment, a kersey pennistouns, or drugget jacket, or three yards of pennistouns, with seven yards of osnaburghs or checks, and six skeins of thread; to every female adult prædial apprentice a kersey pennistouns or drugget wrapper, or three yards of pennistouns, with seven yards of osnaburghs or checks, and six skeins of thread; and to children under the age of 12 years five yards of osnaburghs or checks, and two yards of pennistouns, with four skeins of thread, under a penalty of 2*l.* for every prædial apprentice neglected to be furnished as aforesaid, such penalty to be recovered and applied in manner hereinafter provided as in cases of non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in contracts for task-work or extra service.

Clause 38. Good Friday, Christmas and St. Stephen's days to be holidays, and none other.

And be it further enacted, that Good Friday, Christmas and St. Stephen's days, shall in every year be given and allowed to each and every prædial apprentice as holidays, and no other holidays shall be given or allowed.

Clause 39. No such apprentices shall be obliged to work for their employer more than 45 hours in any one week, except watchmen, &c. &c.

And be it further enacted, that no prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall be bound or liable, by virtue of such apprenticeship, to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week, such time to be computed from the time such labourer shall arrive at the field or place where such labour is to be performed: provided always, that such limited time of labour shall not extend, or be taken or construed to extend, to any such prædial apprenticed labourer who shall be employed in attendance on stock, or as watchman, or by sentence of any special justice for any offence committed against this or any other Act of these Islands, which may subject him, her or them to labour for any extra time in his, her or their employer's service.

Clause 40. If the employer protracts such labour beyond that time, to forfeit 9*d.* per

And be it further enacted, that should the employer of any such prædial apprenticed labourer protract the weekly services of any such labourer beyond the period herein allowed for that purpose, he shall, upon conviction before a special justice, forfeit, for the benefit of such such labourer, the sum of 9*d.* in respect of every hour which such service shall be protracted; and it shall be the duty of every such employer to intimate to the labourers in his employment the commencement and close of the legal hours of labour, for which purpose a signal shall be given in such manner as shall, in reference to each plantation or estate, have been approved by the special justice, which signal shall always be of such nature as to be distinctly visible or audible to the several apprenticed labourers resident on such estate.

hour; signal to be given when the legal hours begin and end.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be bound to undertake any task-work but with his or her own free assent to the same.

Clause 41. No labourer shall undertake any task-work but with his own free assent.

And be it further enacted, that the acquiescence of the minority of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate, in the distribution and appointment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake, shall not be necessary, but the acquiescence of such majority, made and approved of in the manner and form hereinafter provided, shall be binding on the whole of such collective body.

Clause 42. The majority of such labourers willing collectively to undertake any task-work shall bind the minority.

And whereas much difficulty would occur in regulating the time for the completion of that portion of work of each department of the body of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to sugar estates during the time that they are absolutely employed in the manufacture of sugar, and circumstances connected with the process would render it wholly dependant on the labourers, and perfectly uncontrollable by the employer; Be it therefore enacted, that on all estates or plantations, when about to commence crop, and as often as circumstances may render it necessary, the special justice shall, in case he should be applied to by the employer or chief superintendent for that purpose, proceed within three days from such application to such estate or plantation, and then and there inform himself of the quantity of liquor which may be ground in one day, and converted into Muscovado sugar, by the uniform and proper exertion of the body to be employed, by his own observation, and by evidence collected from two or more neighbours, planters, who he shall summons for that purpose; and such justice shall then declare that the quantity fixed shall be the daily task for any time not exceeding 20 days from such inspection and decision thereon; and he shall also determine what shall be allowed to the apprentices, and how such allowance shall be distributed for each hundred gallons of liquor over and above the daily task so fixed, which such apprentices shall, with their own consent and by the desire of their employer, grind and convert into sugar, such allowance not to exceed one-tenth of the value per hundred weight of such sugar.

Clause 43. In time of crop the special magistrate when required shall by observation inform himself of the quantity of liquor ground or sugar made in a given time, and fix the rate of task-work.

And be it enacted, that every contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers for the performance of any specific work, or as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall by such employer be reduced into writing, and entered into a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation or estate.

Clause 44. All contracts between labourers and their employers shall be entered into a book to be kept for that purpose.

And be it further enacted, that no contract between the employer and prædial apprenticed labourer for the performance of any such specific task-work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of 14 days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties in the presence and with the approbation of the special justice, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed or approved by him.

Clause 45. No contract shall be binding for more than 14 days unless entered into in the presence of the special magistrate, or confirmed by him, and none for more than one year.

And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the special justice, before approving any such contract, to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same, and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust; and in every such contract for task work, or for extra service, extending beyond the period of one fortnight, the nature and amount of such extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed, and no contract for such extra service as aforesaid shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

Clause 46. It shall be the duty of the special justice to ascertain if any contract is accurately understood by such apprentice, and that the same is undertaken freely and voluntarily.

And be it further enacted, that upon proof being made to the satisfaction of such special justice of the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra services, it shall be competent to such justice, and he is hereby authorized to award execution against such employer for the amount of such consideration, and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such award, to issue an attachment against the produce, utensils and other chattels upon such plantation, which execution and award shall be in form similar to the form in the Court of Common Pleas of these Islands for the recovery of debts under 20*l.*, and such writ of execution shall bear test in the name of, and be signed by, the special justice of the division; and such execution and attachment as aforesaid shall be directed to any special constable (not being an apprenticed labourer), who is hereby required to serve the same by levying on so much of the produce, utensils or other chattels, estate or plantation, or belonging to the person for whom such contract labour or task was performed, as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, and the produce, utensils or other chattels so levied upon by virtue of such execution shall, together with the time and place of sale, be advertised by affixing a notice thereof at some conspicuous place in the district, and which sale shall not take place before the sixth day from such levy and advertisement; and such produce, utensils or other chattels shall then then and there be put up by such special constable, and knocked down to the highest bidder; and such special constable shall, within three days from such sale, pay to the person or persons the amount adjudged by such special justice to be due to them respectively for such extra services or task-work as aforesaid, and the surplus, if any, shall be delivered over to the defendant.

Clause 48. Any such apprentice violating the terms of such contract, liable to the same pains and penalties as if in the duties owing to his employer, and if 3 or more agree so to do, be deemed guilty of a conspiracy.

And be it further enacted, that any prædial apprenticed labourer violating or disregarding the terms of such contract as aforesaid for task-work or for extra service, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are hereinbefore provided in respect of the neglect or violation by any such labourer of the duties, or any of them, to be performed by such apprenticed labourer in discharge of the service owing by him by law to such his or her employer; and if three or more apprenticed labourers shall agree together to break or violate such contract, they shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and punished accordingly.

Clause 49. Every such prædial apprentice, although a married woman or an infant, is competent to enter into contract for task-work notwithstanding such coverture or infancy.

And be it further enacted, that any prædial apprenticed labourer, being a married woman, shall, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his infancy, shall be competent to enter into any such contract as aforesaid for task-work, or for extra services; and in respect to married women, her coverture shall in no manner annul or abridge the right which her employer might or would have to her services in case such coverture did not exist.

Clause 50. Every employer committing an assault upon such apprentice by whipping, beating, &c. to be fined 10*l.*, or if such apprentice, instead of preferring the complaints to the special justice, to maintain a civil suit for damages.

And be it further enacted, that if any employer of such apprenticed labourer, or the representative of such employer, shall whip, beat, imprison, confine in the stocks, or otherwise maltreat any such apprenticed labourer, or shall by way of punishment commit any assault upon his or her person, such employer or representative shall, upon conviction before any special justice as aforesaid, be fined in any sum not exceeding 10 l., or imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, in the default of the payment of such fine: provided always, that it shall be competent for any such apprenticed labourer, instead of preferring his complaint to such special justice, to maintain any civil suit or action, as in the case of any other person, for damages for such assault; and it shall also be competent to such special justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit or bind over such offender to take his trial for such offence at the next Court of King's Bench and grand sessions of the peace to be holden for these Islands; and in failure of sufficient bail, or if the offence should not be of a bailable nature, then to commit such offender to the common gaol, there to remain till delivered by due course of law.

Clause 51. Any persons, not being such apprentice, convicted by such justice of any offence under this Act may appeal to the Court of King's Bench.

And be it further enacted, that any person or persons, not being an apprenticed labourer, convicted by any special justice or other magistrate of any offence or offences under and by virtue of this Act, may, upon tender of good and sufficient bail, appeal from such conviction to the next Court of King's Bench and grand sessions of the peace to be holden for these Islands, where the offence shall be tried; and if such person or persons so appealing shall be found guilty, he she or they shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, at the discretion of such Court, in any sum, or for any time not exceeding the amount of fine or imprisonment, or both, which he she or they are declared subject and liable to for such offence or offences respectively, under and by virtue of this Act: provided always, that in case such conviction shall be for any offence enumerated in the clause next preceding, then such Court shall punish the offender with fine and imprisonment, or either or both, at their discretion.

Clause 52. A book to be kept on every estate, in which the manager must enter the quantity of food given, or anything in lieu thereof, also clothing, and when such apprentices are engaged in the service of employer, and when in task-work, &c. &c.

And be it also enacted, that on every estate or plantation on which apprenticed labourers are employed, the manager or person having the charge, care, direction or superintendence thereof, shall keep a book in which shall be inserted with precision the quantities of each particular article of food (or anything in lieu thereof) and clothing shared, furnished or supplied to every apprenticed labourer on the said estate or plantation, and at what particular times, as also the particular times when such labourers are engaged in the service of their employers, and if in the performance of extra work, whether the same is in pursuance of any contract voluntarily entered into for hire or work of necessity, and from what cause, the times during which any apprenticed labourer may be absent from his or her employer's service when they ought to be engaged therein, the nature of any offence committed by any apprenticed labourer, whether it be intended to lodge a complaint thereof or not, and all other matters and things which shall take place on the said estate or plantation on which any apprenticed labourer is in any manner concerned out of the usual course of occurrences thereon, and in which book the medical attendant thereon, whether employed by the year or otherwise, shall insert every visit by him paid; and if any patient shall be labouring under any dangerous or severe illness, he shall also insert in the said book the nature thereof, and his prescriptions of any particular kind of food or nourishment for such patient, and which book, on proof being made of the entries therein being truly and correctly inserted, shall be received as evidence in any court before any jurisdiction or authority in these Islands.

Clause 53. When any complaint is made to such special justice, in order to acquire the best information, to visit the estate, and inspect provision grounds and other matters, but to be done in the presence of the manager.

And be it also enacted, that if, from the nature of any complaint made to any justice of the peace so specially commissioned to hear and decide on complaints made by or against apprenticed labourers, it shall be necessary, in order to acquire such knowledge and information of the facts and circumstances connected therewith as cannot otherwise be obtained, it shall and may in every such case be lawful for such justice to visit the estate, plantation or other place whereon or to which the apprenticed labourer by whom or on whose behalf, or against whom such complaint was made, is resident or belonging, and to inspect the provision ground allotted to him or her, or make such inquiry and examination into all such matters relating relating to such complaint as shall be necessary: provided always, that the same shall in every such case take place and be done in the presence and hearing of the employer, manager, overseer or other person having the care, management or direction, of such apprentice.

Clause 54. Every non-prædial apprenticed labourer or domestic not conducting himself properly shall be subject to the same punishments as prædial apprentices.

And be it also enacted, that every domestic and other non-prædial apprenticed servant or labourer, engaged in the performance of any work and labour other than such as appertains to any estate or plantation in these Islands, shall, during the term of his apprenticeship, perform in an honest, faithful and obedient manner, consistently with his or her employer's lawful and reasonable commands, such work and labour in his or her situation as such employer shall require to be done and performed by such domestic, or other servant or labourer; that he or she shall not be insolent, or guilty of any offensive, indecent or improper language or conduct, or be addicted to drunkenness, or quit his or her employer's service, or absent himself or herself therefrom at improper times, or without permission, during such period; and if any such apprenticed servant or labourer shall in any manner whatever fail in the due performance of his or her duties as required by this clause, or act contrary to the true meaning and intention thereof, he or she so offending, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall for every such offence be subject and liable to the same punishments as the prædial apprentices are or may be subject to for the like offence.

Clause 55. Every employer of such non-prædial apprentice shall provide him with sufficient lodging, food, medical assistance; and neglecting so to do, liable to be punished as in case of prædial apprentices.

And be it also enacted, that every employer of any such apprenticed servant or labourer not engaged in the performance of any plantation work, shall provide every such servant or labourer with sufficient and proper lodging, food and clothing, such as servants and labourers in his or her situation have been usually supplied and provided with, and such medicines and medical assistance as shall be necessary, and that such employer shall not beat or punish in any manner whatever any such servant or labourer for any offence by him or her committed, but shall in every such case proceed in manner and form hereinbefore directed for the punishment of offences committed by prædial apprenticed labourers; and every employer failing to comply with the requisitions contained in this clause, or in any respect acting contrary thereto, shall in every such case be subject and liable, on being duly convicted thereof in like manner as for offences committed against prædial apprentices, to any fine not exceeding 5*l.*, nor less than 1*s.*, to be recovered and applied as other fines are by this Act directed to be recovered and applied.

Clause 56. Any persons legally in possession of the services of apprenticed labourers shall be considered as the employer, and any offences committed against the deputy or representative of such, shall be considered as against the employer.

And be it further enacted, that the person legally in the possession of, or having the legal right or title to the services of any slave becoming apprentices under and by virtue of the before recited statute passed in the 3d & 4th years of the reign of King William the Fourth, or having the right in the services of any apprentice or apprentices by virtue of any indenture or instrument made conformably with such statute, or the attorney, agent, executor or administrator or assigns of such person, or the person hiring the services of such apprentice or apprentices from them, or either or any of them, shall be deemed, taken and considered for the purposes of this Act, as the employer of such apprentice or apprentices; and any person or persons entrusted or empowered by such employer with the chief superintendence and direction of the labour of such apprentices, shall be deemed as the representative of such employer, and any offence committed by any apprenticed labourer against such representative, or the deputy or deputies of such representative, or any disobedience of his or their orders, shall be deemed, taken, considered and treated as an offence committed against the employer; and wherever words are used in this Act importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, yet this Act shall be understood to include several matters as well as one matter, and several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

Clause 57. All fines and penalties under this Act to be in current gold and silver money.

And be it further enacted, that all fines and penalties imposed under and by virtue of this Act, shall be deemed and taken to be imposed in current gold and silver money, and shall in all cases herein not otherwise provided, be paid into the treasury of these Islands, for the public uses thereof.

Clause 58. Any person refusing to comply with any of the requisitions of this Act to which a penalty is not attached, liable to fine by the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that any person or persons refusing or neglecting to comply with any of the requisitions of this Act to which an express penalty is not hereinbefore attached, shall, upon conviction before any special justice of the peace of these Islands, be subject to any fine not less than 5*s.*, or more than 5*l.*, or in default of payment, to imprisonment to any time not exceeding one month.

Clause 59. This Act to be in force on the 1st day of August 1834.

And be it further enacted, that this Act shall be in force on the 1st day of August 1834, and not before, and shall thenceforward be deemed a General Act, and all persons to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Clause 60. Act to be published in the usual places.

And be it further enacted, that this Act shall be published and proclaimed in the usual places.

Colonial Laws. No. 39.

— No. 39. —

Virgin Islands: Tortola.

AN ACT for prescribing the Powers and Duties of Special Justices, and for defining the Jurisdiction of the same.

Preamble.

WHEREAS by the 14th section of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, made and passed in the 3d & 4th years of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty to issue, or to authorize the Governor of any such Colony, in the name and on behalf of His Majesty, to issue, under the public seal of any such Colony, one or more special commission or commissions to any one or more person or persons, constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of any such Colony, or for any parish, precinct, quarter or district within the same, for the special purpose of giving effect thereto, and to any laws which may in any manner thereinbefore mentioned be made for giving more complete effect to the same: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Governor and Commander-in-chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Barbuda, Montserrat, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and in his absence the chief officer administering the government of the said Virgin Islands, and the Council and Assembly of these Your Majesty's Virgin Islands, humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted and ordained, and it is hereby enacted and ordained by the authority aforesaid, that on every plantation or estate the special justice of the peace shall appoint one or more of the male apprenticed labourers thereon, with the consent and approbation of the employer thereof, to be special constables, who shall be empowered to maintain peace and order on such plantation or estate, under the direction of the owner or manager thereof, or employer of the apprenticed labourer thereon, and to secure and place in confinement when absolutely necessary any apprenticed labourer who shall commit any offence on such plantation or estate, or any apprenticed labourer not employed on such plantation or estate who may be found loitering thereon without the knowledge and permission of the owner or manager thereof, such apprentice confined as aforesaid to be not kept in custody longer than shall be necessary to obtain the trial of such apprentice before a special justice of the peace: provided always, that no such apprentice shall be kept in confinement beyond 24 hours before trial, unless by order of any such justice; provided nevertheless, that such trial shall take place as soon as possible after such release; and provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to give any such constable appointed as aforesaid any power or authority over any of His Majesty's subjects other than apprenticed labourers.

Clause . Special constables may be appointed out of the apprenticed labourers by consent of the employer.

Clause 2. The deputy provost-marshal, or any constable, may execute any writ or other process as directed by the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that the deputy provost-marshal, or any constable of these Islands, is hereby authorized and required to execute any writ or attachment, or to serve any summons, warrant or other process to him or them directed by such special justice, or to do any other matter or thing for the more effectually carrying into effect the provisions of any of the Acts of these Islands passed conformably to the said Act of the Imperial Parliament aforesaid.

Clause 3. Said justice to hold a session once a week, or oftener if necessary.

And be it further enacted, that every such special justice of the peace shall one day in each week, or oftener if need be, at the place of his residence, hold a session for the hearing and deciding upon such cases as may be brought before him, and which shall and is hereby directed to be open and public to all and every and any person or persons who may please to attend.

Clause 4. He shall keep a journal of all the cases brought before him, which is to be kept as a record in his office.

And be it further enacted, that every such special justice of the peace shall keep a journal of all the cases brought before him, in which he shall enter, 1st, the date of the complaint; 2d, the name of the complainant; 3d, the substance of the complaint; 4th, the name of the witnesses adduced on either side; 5th, the substance of the evidence; 6th, his decision on the case; 7th, whether the decision has been carried into effect; 8th, any general remarks which the circumstances of the case may call for: and he shall and he is hereby required to take all complaints, accusations, charges or informations in writing, which shall be sworn to in due form of law, and such justice shall file the same, and keep them of record in his office ready to be produced as occasion may require.

Clause 5. If any complaint brought before him is considered immaterial he may dismiss it.

And be it further enacted, that if any complaint or accusation made to any special justice shall appear to him on previous inquiry, which he is hereby allowed to make prior to his reducing the same into writing as before directed, immaterial and not to deserve further consideration, he may dismiss the same, unless the person appearing before him shall insist upon proceeding therewith.

Clause 6. No apprenticed labourer to have in his possession fire-arms, gunpowder, &c. without consent of employer.

And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer to have in his or her possession any gunpowder, fire-arms or other offensive weapons of any description whatever, without the knowledge, consent and approbation of his or her employer, or the representative of such employer, and that every such offender, on conviction before any special justice, shall be adjudged to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, or to whipping not exceeding 39 lashes, or to both of such punishments, at the discretion of the said special justice; and every employer of, or manager, overseer, overseer, or other person having the direction or superintendence of any apprenticed labourer or labourers, and all constables, special constables, and other persons in authority, civil or military, within these Islands, are hereby required to dispossess any such apprentice or apprentices of any gunpowder, muskets, pistols, swords, cutlasses, pikes, spears, daggers or other offensive or dangerous weapons, which he, she or they may have in his, her or their possession without such permission, and cause the same to be delivered to or as directed by the Governor, to be disposed of or kept in such place of security as he shall order; and in order to prevent a collection of gunpowder and offensive and dangerous weapons getting into improper hands, by which the safety of the Colony may be endangered, that any justice of the peace for these Islands may, on receiving such information as shall show a probability of any such collection being making, to give authority to such proper persons as he may appoint to search any such suspected depositories of arms or gunpowder for improper purposes as he may receive information of.

Any justice of the peace may search for such suspected depositories.

And be it further enacted, that upon any complaint or information to any special justice of the peace, made by or against any apprenticed labourer, for or on account of any matter or thing or offence against the provisions of this or any other Act or Acts relating to apprenticed labourers and their employers, or which is or may be incidental to or arising out of the relation of any apprenticed labourer to his or her employer, or the person entitled to his or her services, or upon or for the infliction of any corporal punishment upon any apprenticed labourer by his or her employer, or upon or for any breach of the peace by any apprenticed labourer upon the person of his or her employer, it shall and may be lawful for the special justice of the peace before whom any such complaint or information is made or lodged, and he is hereby directed to receive and take the same in the manner and form aforesaid, and to hear, and in a summary manner determine the same, either dismissing such complaint or information as frivolous or vexatious, or malicious, and summarily punishing the party bringing the same as hereinafter directed, or sentencing, on conviction, the party complained against to any of the pains and penalties particularly prescribed for such offence as he or she shall have been found guilty against this or any other Act or Acts of these Islands, passed or to be passed in conformity with the said Act of the Imperial Parliament aforesaid.

Clause 7.
The special justice may proceed to examine in a summary manner any complaint brought by or against any such apprentice.

And be it further enacted, that upon the preferring or lodging of any accusation, charge or information imputing to the party charged a capital or transportable offence, or upon or for the infliction of any corporal punishment upon any apprenticed labourer by his or her employer, or upon or for any breach of the peace by any apprenticed labourer upon the person of his or her employer, it shall and may be lawful for the special justice of the peace receiving the same, and he is hereby directed, after having taken the said accusation, charge or information in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the alleged offender, and having him or her before him, to commit him or her to the common gaol of these Islands; or if the alleged offence is one bailable by law, to take bail in such sum as to the said justice shall seem sufficient, with one or more responsible sureties, who is or are to justify, should the said justice so please, for the appearance of the said alleged offender at the Court of King's Bench and quarter sessions of the peace then next to be holden for the said Islands, then and there to answer to any prosecution that may be preferred against him or her by the party complaining; and the said special justice of the peace is hereby further empowered, in cases of any capital or transportable offence, to bind over the party accusing to prosecute such alleged offender for such offence at the said court.

In complaints for offences such justice may issue his warrant, examine, and either commit or bail the offender.

And be it further enacted, that upon the taking in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, by any special justice of the peace, of any complaint or information made by any apprenticed labourer, or by any employer of any apprenticed labourer, for or in respect of any matter, thing or offence against the provisions of this or any other Act or Acts passed or to be passed relative to apprenticed labourers or their employers, or the persons entitled to their services (other than a capital or transportable offence, or in cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged would endeavour to escape, or in all cases when there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay), the said special justice shall summon the person complained against or informed upon to appear at a time and place to be named in such summons; and if he or she shall not appear accordingly, then, upon proof upon oath of the due service of the said summons upon such person, by delivering the same to him or her personally, or by leaving the same at his or her usual place of abode, or by reading the same to him or her, the said special justice may, unless a good and sufficient cause for such non-attendance be made, issue his warrant to the deputy provost-marshal or to a constable for compelling the same, and may, should he deem it necessary, bind over the person so complained of by recognizance to appear before him at such time and place as he shall appoint for hearing and deciding upon such complaint; and should such person refuse to enter into such recognizance and give the required security for his or her appearance, such person shall, by order of the said justice, be sent to gaol, or, if any apprenticed labourers, to gaol or such other place of confinement as the said justice shall think proper to order, there to remain until the time appointed for the hearing, or until such recognizance shall be entered into; and such justice shall upon conviction sentence such offender to the punishment or punishments prescribed in and by this or any other Act or Acts to the commission of the particular offence he or she hath been so convicted of.

Clause 9.
But where there is no fear of escape, said justice may summon parties to appear.

Clause 10. Any person against whom a charge is preferred may obtain a copy of same in writing.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that all or any person or persons who shall have preferred against him, her or them any complaint, charge or accusation or information, shall at any time, upon demand made to the special justice of the peace receiving the same, be entitled to a sight, and also a true copy, if required, of such complaint, charge, accusation or information reduced into writing as aforesaid.

Clause 11. On proceeding in the charge said justice must read over the charge to the defendant, or in presence of some person appearing in his behalf.

And be it further enacted, that at the time and place specified in any summons issued by any special justice for proceeding upon any complaint, charge or information preferred or lodged before him, such special justice shall, in the presence of the party complained against, or charged or informed upon, if in attendance, or in the presence of any other person attending on his or her behalf, read over the complaint or charge or information subscribed and sworn to in the manner and form hereinbefore directed, and shall take in writing the plea or answer of the party complained against, or charged or informed upon, whether guilty or not guilty, if he or she be in attendance; and the said special justice shall examine all the witnesses in support of the said complaint, or charge or information, and then examine all the witnesses on the part of the party complained against, or charged or informed upon, and shall take in writing the evidence of any or all of the witnesses on either side, which, when finished, shall be read, signed or marked, certified and attested, in the manner and form directed in cases of complaints, charges, accusations or informations made before, and taken and received by any special justice.

Clause 12. Employer of such apprenticed labourer may proceed by indictment in the first instance, if he thinks proper.

Provided always, and it is hereby enacted and declared, that nothing herein contained shall prevent or be construed to prevent any employer of any apprenticed labourer, on whose person any breach of the peace may have been committed by any such apprenticed labourer, from applying for redress by warrant from any justice of the peace for these Islands in the first instance, and by indictment in ordinary form of law, if he or she shall prefer so doing to complaining to the special justice: provided always, that any punishment by summary conviction and sentence of such special justice under this Act, inflicted on any apprenticed labourer for any such breach of the peace, shall be a bar to any further punishment for the same by any superior court of criminal jurisdiction within these Islands, anything herein contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding.

Clause 13. Such justice may issue his summons for the attendance of witnesses; how to proceed if such is not attended to.

And be it enacted, that the special justice before whom any witness or witnesses shall be required to give testimony in support or in refutation of any complaints or accusations made by or against any apprenticed labourer, is hereby empowered and required to issue his summons respecting the time and place when and where such witness or witnesses is or are to give his, her or their attendance; and in case of the non-attendance of any such witness, upon due proof being made of the service of such summons upon him or her, such justice is hereby required to issue his further summons, calling upon such non-attending witness to be and appear at such time and place as shall be therein specified, to show cause for such non-attendance, and failing so to do, on his or her oath, or by the oath of some other person, or if he or she shall not attend such further summons, due proof of service thereof being made, he or she shall, if an apprenticed labourer, be imprisoned by order of such justice, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding three nor less than one month, or if any other than an apprenticed labourer, fined in any sum not exceeding 5*l.* to the use of the person on whose behalf he or she was summoned to give evidence, and in default of payment, the same to be levied on his or her goods and chattels, and for want thereof, to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding three nor less than one month.

Clause 14. Any person giving false testimony to be liable to all penalties of perjury.

And be it further enacted, that if any person or persons, upon examination on oath or affirmation before any special justice or any commissioner appointed or to be appointed conformably to the said Act of the Imperial Parliament, shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, or shall in such affidavit or deposition wilfully or corruptly swear, affirm or allege any matter or thing which shall be false or untrue, every such person or persons so offending, and being thereof duly convicted, shall be and is and are hereby declared to be subject and liable to the pains and penalties of persons convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury.

Clause 15. In case there is no witness other than the person making the charge, said justice may take the oath of the accused, except for an indictable offence.

And be it further enacted, that in case there is no witness in support of any complaint, charge, accusation or information, but the person making the same, it shall and may be lawful, and the special justice is hereby required and directed to take the oath of the party complained against, accused or charged or informed upon, he or she consenting thereto, and the said special justice is hereby required to take the same in the same manner and form as hereinbefore directed by this Act to be made and taken in cases of complaints or accusations, charges or informations made, preferred or adjudged before any such special justice: provided always, that such oath shall not be made, taken or received in any case which imputes to the party charged a capital or transportable offence, or disobedience of orders by any apprenticed labourer to the lawful commands of his or her employer, or any insolence or insubordination, or breach of the peace, on the part of any apprenticed labourer to his or her employer; and provided also, that evidence shall in all such cases be received, when necessary, as to the credibility of any witness, and that such special justice shall, should any doubt arise, satisfy himself, previously to the swearing of any witness, that he or she hath a competent knowledge of the nature and obligation of an oath.

Clause 16. Said justice may adjourn his proceedings, and commit the party charged, if necessary.

And be it further enacted, that any special justice before whom any complaint, charge or accusation or information is made, may from time to time adjourn any proceedings therein, and if necessary shall commit the party charged with a capital or transportable offence offence to custody, if an apprenticed labourer, to the house of correction or any other place of confinement established by law, and if any other person, to the common gaol of these Islands, pending such adjournment, or to take bail, if such offence is by law bailable, for his future appearance.

Clause 17. All fines, &c. imposed to be paid into the hands of the justice who imposed them; who to be given to.

And be it further enacted, that all fines and penalties imposed by this Act to the use of the party damnified, shall be paid into the hands of such special justice of the peace who imposed the same, and he is hereby directed to pay over the same to the party entitled thereto, taking an acknowledgment from the party receiving, if he shall see fit.

Clause 18. Any special justice awarding any punishment not authorized by law, liable to action of party aggrieved.

And be it further enacted, that any and every special justice under this Act awarding to any person any punishment not authorized by law for him to award, shall be subject and liable to the action or suit of the party aggrieved by the award of such unlawful or unauthorized punishment.

Clause 19. The special justice shall protect the apprenticed labourers in any suit or action, as owners of slaves did before the 1st August.

And be it further enacted, that in all prosecutions or actions in any of the superior courts of the said Virgin Islands, in which any apprenticed labourer appears as plaintiff or defendant, or in which any such apprenticed labourer may be concerned, that the special justice of the peace in which such apprenticed labourer resides, shall appear on the part of and prosecute for, or defend, or otherwise protect, any such apprenticed labourer or his interests, in the same manner as owners of slaves, before the 1st day of August 1834, did protect the interests of their slaves.

Clause 20. Special justice may address summonses, warrants, &c. to the deputy provost-marshal, or to any constable.

And be it enacted, that all summonses, warrants, commitments and other process to be issued by any special justice, shall be executed by, and such justice is hereby authorized to issue and address the same to the provost-marshal of these Islands, or his lawful deputy, or to any constable of the said Virgin Islands.

Clause 21. All fines and penalties to be in current gold and silver money.

And be it further enacted, that all fines and penalties imposed in and by virtue of this Act, shall be and the same are of current gold and silver money of these Islands.

Clause 22. Any such apprentice absenting himself from employer's service must make reparation for the loss of time, by after servitude.

And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, during the term of his or her apprenticeship, wilfully absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, or commit any offence for which he or she shall be sentenced to confinement, by which the employer of such apprentice shall lose his or her services, that such apprentice shall be subject and liable to make satisfaction for the loss thereby sustained by such employer, by working in the service and for the benefit of the person or persons so entitled to his or her services for so long a time, during the hours by this Act allowed to him or her for his or her benefit, as shall be equal to the loss so sustained by any such absence, so that such extra service shall not in any case exceed 15 hours in any one week; or if full compensation shall not thereby be made to the person or persons entitled to the services of any such apprentice for the loss sustained by any such absence, that such apprentice shall be liable to a prolongation of his or her apprenticeship after the original term shall have expired, for so long a time as will be sufficient to make up such loss: provided always, that no such additional or new apprenticeship shall be compellable after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of such original apprenticeship.

Clause 23. All recognizances to be delivered to the clerk of the Crown 7 days previous to the sitting of the court.

And be it further enacted, that every special justice of the peace who shall take any recognizance under this Act shall, seven days preceding the sitting of the Court of King's Bench and quarter sessions of the peace, holden in and for these Islands next after the taking of the same, transmit such recognizance to the clerk of the Crown of these Islands, by him to be kept among the records of the said court, for the purpose of any prosecution which the party aggrieved may please to institute.

Clause 24. Any person other than such apprentice, aggrieved by sentence of special justice, may appeal. Mode of.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that in all cases any person other than an apprenticed labourer who shall think himself or herself aggrieved by any such conviction, may appeal to the next Court of King's Bench and quarter sessions of the peace, which shall be holden not less than 12 days after such conviction; provided that such person shall give to the complainant a notice in writing of such appeal, and of the cause and matter thereof, within three days after such conviction, and seven clear days at the least before the first sittings of such Court, and shall also either remain in custody until the said first sittings, or enter into a recognizance with two sufficient sureties, who shall justify upon oath, if necessary, before a special justice of the peace, conditioned personally to appear at the said King's Bench or quarter sessions of the peace, and to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of the Court thereupon, and to pay such costs as shall be by the Court awarded; and upon such notice being given, and such recognizance being entered into, the justice before whom the same shall be entered into, shall liberate such person if in custody, and the said court at its first or subsequent sittings shall hear and determine the matter of the appeal, and shall make such order therein, with or without costs to either party, as to the said Court shall seem meet; and in case of dismissal of the appeal or the affirmance of the conviction, shall order and adjudge the offender to be punished according to the conviction, and to pay such costs as shall be awarded, and shall, if necessary, issue process for enforcing such judgment.

Clause 25. Any prosecution against any special justice for

And for the protection of the special justices of the peace acting under this or any other Act or Acts passed or to be passed respecting the relation subsisting between apprenticed labourers anything done in pursuance of this Act to be commenced within six months. Notice to be given.

labourers and their employers or other persons entitled to their services, Be it enacted, that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any such special justice of the peace for anything done in pursance of this or any other Act or Acts as before mentioned, or by mistake or misapprehension in the conception, or under the impression that he was acting under any of the same, shall be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise, and notice of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defender one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action; and no such action or prosecution shall be commenced against any such special justice of the peace for any thing done in the execution of his office, until such notice in writing of such intended commencement of such action or prosecution shall have been delivered to him; and in any such action or prosecution the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this or any other Act or Acts before mentioned, and the special matter, in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon, and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends is proved on any such trial to have been made by any such special justice of the peace before such action brought; and in any such action, if any such special justice of the peace shall at any time before judgment tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred, then upon proof thereof produced at the trial of such action, and that sufficient amends had been tendered and refused, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff in the amount only of the sum so tendered, subject nevertheless to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the defendant; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit or discontinue any such action after issue joined, or upon demurrer or otherwise judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover treble costs of suit, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant hath by law in other cases; and although a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff in any such action, such plaintiff shall not have costs against the defendant unless the chief or other justice presiding in the court in which such action is tried, shall certify his approbation of the action and of the verdict obtained thereupon.

Clause 26. If any such justice shall abuse the powers in him vested, liable to action at suit of party.

And be it further enacted, that if any special justice of the peace shall exceed or abuse the powers in him vested by this or any other Act passed or to be passed in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament for the abolition of slavery, he shall be subject and liable to the action or suit of the party aggrieved; and if any person shall recover a verdict against him in such action or suit, such person so recovering a verdict against him shall be entitled to receive treble costs from such special justice of the peace.

Clause 27. Special justices are under the same protection, and governed by the same rules as other justices.

And for providing for any omission as to the protection, or as regards the responsibility of any special justice of the peace, Be it further enacted, that all any and every such special justice of the peace within the said Virgin Islands are and is hereby declared to be under the same protection, liable to the same responsibility, and governed by the same rules, as all or any other justices of the peace of England or of the Virgin Islands are, or is, or may be by the common law, or by any statute of Great Britain, or by any other Act of the said Virgin Islands.

Clause 28. Instrument of punishment to be a cat-o'-nine-tails.

And be it further enacted, that the instrument to be used in the infliction of corporal punishment by flogging under this Act, shall be a cat-o'-nine-tails similar to those used for the purpose in His Majesty's navy.

Clause 29. This Act to be deemed and taken to be a general Act.

And be it further enacted, that this Act shall be deemed, taken and considered as a General Act, and shall be taken notice of as such by all judges, justices and jurors, and other persons whomsoever, without specially pleading or showing forth the same.

Virgin Islands:—Tortola.

No. 40.

AN ACT to regulate the removal of prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one plantation or estate to another; the Alienation, by sale, inheritance or will, of the Services of Apprenticed Labourers; the Apprenticeship of Children of Apprenticed Labourers; and the relation in which Apprenticed Labourers will stand towards the State in the said Virgin Islands; and thereby to carry more effectually into operation the enactments contained in that behalf in an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves".

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is deemed expedient to provide for the removal of prædial apprenticed labourers from one plantation or estate in this Colony to another, to regulate the manner in which which the services of apprenticed labourers shall pass, by sale, inheritance or otherwise, and to establish rules for the apprenticeship of children who shall not have attained the age of six years on the 1st day of August 1834, and of those thereafter to be born of apprenticed labourers, conformably with certain provisions of an Act of Parliament of the 3d & 4th years of His Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and in his absence, the chief officer administering the government of the said Virgin Islands, and the Council and Assembly of these Your Majesty's Virgin Islands, do humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be,

Clause 1. That no apprenticed labourer shall be liable to work for employer on any other estate than the one they were usually employed upon previously to 1st August 1834, except by consent of two special justices; such consent to be attested and recorded.

And be it, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that no prædial apprenticed labourer who may, in the manner provided and declared of and concerning the same in and by the said hereinbefore mentioned Act of Parliament, become attached to the soil, shall be subject or liable to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, except upon, or in, or about the works and business of the plantations or estates to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have been attached, or on which he or she shall have been usually employed on or previously to the 1st day of August 1834: provided nevertheless, that with the consent in writing of any two or more justices of the peace holding special commissions, it shall and may be lawful for the person or persons entitled to the services of any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers, to transfer his, her or their services to any other estate or plantation within the same Colony to such person or persons belonging; which written consent shall in no case be given, or be of any validity, unless any such justice shall first have ascertained that such transfer would not have the effect of separating any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, and that such transfer would not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of such attached prædial apprenticed labourer; and such written consent to any such removal shall be expressed in such terms, and shall be in such case given, attested and recorded in such manner as shall for that purpose be hereinafter prescribed.

Clause 2. If only one special justice is appointed, the consent of that one shall be sufficient. Form thereof.

And for the purpose of supplying the deficiency of the section last recited, Be it further enacted, that in case of there being but one justice so specially commissioned as aforesaid residing within the said Virgin Islands at any time when any such consent shall be required, the consent of that one shall be sufficient for the purpose of removal or transfer of any such prædial attached apprenticed labourer or labourers: provided always, that such consent shall be in writing, and shall bes igned by the special justices, or special justice, if only one special justice be residing in the said Virgin Islands, as required by this Act; and that such consent shall express to be given in their or his capacity of special justice, and that the form of the consent aforesaid be in words following:

"These are to certify, that upon the application of (the name of the employer desirous of removing his apprenticed labourers or labourer), according to the provisions of an Act, intituled, 'An Act (this Act),' we (or I, as the necessity of the case may be), have inquired into the circumstances of the case, and being satisfied that such removal may be made without infringing any of the regulations in the said Act in this respect contained, we (or I, as the necessity of the case may require), do hereby permit the said (employer aforesaid) to remove the several attached prædial apprentices named (here name them, specifying the relations, or reputed relations, they may bear to each other), from plantation or estate, in the district, to plantation or estate in the same or district. Given under our hands (or my hand, as the necessity of the case may be,) this day of 18 ."

Clause 3. Such consent to be recorded in a book for that purpose to be kept, and a true copy thereof given to employer, if required.

And be it further enacted, that any special justice giving and joining in such consent, shall insert in a book, which is hereby directed to be by him kept for the purpose, a true copy of the consent by himself so given or joined in as aforesaid, there to remain as a record of such transfer, and shall deliver such written consent to the employer or employers applying therefor.

Clause 4. Such consent not necessary for occasional work or business, but only in case of removal for permanent domicile.

And be it further enacted, that such consent as aforesaid shall not be necessary where such attached prædial apprenticed labourers or labourer may be employed in any occasional work or business, by desire of their employer, on any estate or plantation, or otherwise, which work or business shall not continue for more than five days in succession, and that the foregoing clauses shall apply only to removal for the permanent domicile of such labourers.

Clause 5. Services of such apprentices may be transferred by sale or otherwise, but such transfer not to separate husband and wife, parent and child, &c.

And be it enacted, in conformity to the 10th section of the said hereinbefore mentioned Act of Parliament, that the right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any apprenticed labourers, shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, according to law; provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall by virtue of any such bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, be subject to or liable to be separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her.

Clause 6. On the 1st August 1834 every child under six years, or any born after, to be brought before the special justice, and if it

And in accordance with the 13th section of the said Act of Parliament, Be it further enacted, that if any child who, on the said 1st day of August 1834, had not completed his or her sixth year, or if any child to whom any female apprenticed labourer may give birth on or after the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be brought before any justice of appears to him that such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, may apprentice him to the person entitled to the services of the mother; exceptions thereto.

of the peace holding any such special commission as in the said Act of Parliament mentioned, and if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of such justice that any such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, and that such child hath not completed his or her age of 12 years, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required, on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother; but in case it shall be made to appear to any such justice, that such person or persons aforesaid is or are unable or unfit to enter into such indenture, and properly to perform the conditions thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required, by such indenture to bind any such child to any other person or persons to be by him for that purpose approved, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and it shall by every such indenture of apprenticeship be declared whether such child shall thenceforward belong to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and the term of such apprenticeship of any such child shall by such indenture be limited and made to continue in force until such child shall have completed his or her 21st year, and no longer; and every child so apprenticed as aforesaid, by the order of any such justice of the peace as aforesaid, shall, during his or her apprenticeship, be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work and labour to be by them done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be to him or her furnished, as any other apprenticed labourers in the said Act before mentioned: provided always, that the said indenture of apprenticeship shall contain sufficient words of obligation upon the employer to allow reasonable time and opportunity for the education and religious instruction of such child.

Clause 7. Form of such indentures of apprenticeship to be the same used in England, conformably to this Act.

And for the settling the form of the indenture requisite and necessary for the purpose of apprenticeship, Be it further enacted, that the form of such indenture of apprenticeship shall be the same as forms of apprenticeship used in England, making the same conformable with the requisitions of this Act.

Clause 8. When such indenture is properly executed, copy to be delivered to the party.

And be it further enacted, that whensoever any such indenture of apprenticeship is executed by the necessary parties, that a counterpart shall likewise be executed, and delivered to the party to whom any such apprenticed labourer is apprenticed.

Clause 9. Such indenture to be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose. Indenture to be preserved by the special justice for inspection.

And be it further enacted, that whensoever any of such indentures of apprenticeship shall be executed by the necessary parties thereto, the same shall be recorded in a book by such special justice executing the same, which is hereby directed to be kept for the purpose by such special justice, and the special justice shall preserve the said indenture of apprenticeship in his said office ready for inspection, or any other purpose for which it may be required.

Clause 10. All apprenticed labourers under this Act are exempted and excluded from all offices, civil or military, during such term; exceptions thereto.

And be it further enacted, in accordance with the 22d section of the said hereinbefore mentioned Act of Parliament, that all and every persons or person in the said Virgin Islands who, on or after the 1st day of August 1834, shall become apprenticed labourers or labourer by the terms and force and effect of this Act, or of the said Act of the said Imperial Parliament, shall, during the continuance of any term of apprenticeship as therein and thereby specified, be exempted and excluded, except in the cases hereafter mentioned, from the performance of any service, civil or military, in the same, and shall be and are and is hereby disqualified from holding or exercising, and shall be and are and is hereby declared incompetent, except in the cases hereinafter mentioned, to hold any situation, civil or military, in the said Virgin Islands, during the continuance of every term of such apprenticeship; and also shall be and are and is hereby exempted from all or any imprisonment for any debts or debt which they, or any of them, may contract or incur; anything contained, or which may be construed or considered as contained to the contrary in any Act or Acts, and particularly in an Act of the said Virgin Islands, intituled, "An Act to extend to His Majesty's free Coloured and free Black subjects of the said Virgin Islands, in the manner thereafter mentioned, all the rights, privileges and immunities which are now held and enjoyed by His Majesty's White subjects," in anywise notwithstanding: provided always, that nothing herein shall extend, or be construed to extend, to absolve, disqualify or declare incompetent any apprenticed labourers or labourer, during the term of any of their or his time of apprenticeship aforesaid, from the duty of serving, at the request of his or their employer or employers, in a civil or military capacity, if appointed thereto by the Governor, or person lawfully administering the government of the said Virgin Islands, by and with the advice and consent of the Privy Council of the same, in case of rebellion or other great public exigency, or to serve as special constable as directed by any other Act passed in pursuance of said Act of Parliament.

Clause 11. This Act to be in force on 1st August 1834.

And be it further enacted, that this Act shall be in force on the 1st day of August 1834, and not before, and shall thenceforward be deemed a general Act, and all persons to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

AN ACT for registering all Persons actually within this Island, on the 1st day of August in this present Year of our Lord 1834, and who shall have been duly registered as Slaves, in conformity with the Laws now in force; and also, for establishing a Classification thereof, for the purposes set forth in and by an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves."—

(Passed 19th May 1834.)

WHEREAS it is necessary that a registry should be made of all persons actually within this Island, on the 1st day of August in this present year of our Lord 1834, and who shall have been duly registered as slaves, in conformity with the laws now in force: And whereas it is also necessary that the slaves actually appearing by such registry to remain, should be divided into classes, as hereinafter directed: We, therefore, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Governor and Commander-in-chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands, and Dominica, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Dominica, humbly pray Your Most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained,

1. And be it and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all persons who on the 31st day of July, in the present year of our Lord 1834, shall be in possession of any slave or slaves in this Island, and who by the laws now in force are required to make triennial returns thereof, shall on the 1st day of August 1834, or within 30 days thereafter, make and give in to the registrar of slaves, returns thereof, in all respects in conformity with the laws now in force, establishing such triennial registry; and in addition thereto shall make an alphabetical list of all slaves, &c. &c. appearing by such returns to remain on the date aforesaid, divided into the following heads and classes; that is to say, "prædial attached," "prædial unattached," "non-prædial," and "under six years": provided always, and be it enacted, that under the head of "prædial attached," shall be included alone all persons who, on the said 31st day of July 1834, shall be of the full age of six years and upwards, and who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners; under the head of "prædial unattached," shall be included all such persons who in their state of slavery were actually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and under the head of "non-prædial" shall be included all such persons as are not included in either of the two last-mentioned classes: provided also, that for the purposes aforesaid, every slave engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas, shall be deemed and taken to be within this Island; and for the greater uniformity of such returns, and that no person may pretend ignorance of the proper form thereof, an example is contained in a schedule to this Act annexed, to which all persons are required to conform: provided always, that no person above the age of 12 years shall be included in either of the classes of "prædial attached," or "prædial unattached," unless such person shall for 12 months at least, previous to the 28th day of August 1833, have been habitually employed in prædial labour.

2. And, to the intent that all persons required to deliver in returns and lists as aforesaid may be duly apprised of the proper time of doing so, and of the manner and form thereof; be it enacted, that the registrar or his deputy shall, and he is hereby required, as soon as possible after the passing of this Act, to send printed copies of the same to the way-wardens of the respective parishes, for distribution amongst the inhabitants thereof; and shall cause advertisements to be inserted in the newspaper of this Island, notifying the proper time of delivering in the said returns; and shall also cause to be printed, at the public expense, a sufficient number of the forms of returns directed by the first clause of this Act, and shall transmit the same, with the printed copies of this Act, to the way-wardens as aforesaid, who are hereby required to distribute the said schedules or forms, to such persons as shall apply for the same: and if the said registrar or his deputy, or any of the way-wardens, shall neglect to perform any of the duties by this Act directed, such party so offending shall for every such neglect forfeit the sum of 200 l. current money: provided always, that the way-wardens shall be allowed to employ such constables, or other as many free persons as may be necessary in their respective parishes, for giving publicity to this Act, and notification of the time for making the returns; and the said constables or other free persons shall be entitled to demand and receive, on the production of a certificate from a majority of the respective way-wardens, the sum of 1 s. 6 d. for each person so summoned or notified.

3. And be it further enacted, that the registrar shall carefully preserve the original lists or returns given in to him, and cause the same, within six months after receiving them, to be copied clearly and distinctly (under the names of the parishes from which such returns are respectively made), in a book strongly bound and duly paged and indexed, to be by him provided and kept in his office; and such book or books are hereby declared to be public property: and when and so soon as the said lists or returns shall have been duly entered and recorded as aforesaid, the said registrar or his deputy shall give notice forthwith, by advertisements in the public newspapers, that the same are completed, and the said book or books shall continue open in his office for the inspection of the public.

4. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the registrar or his deputy shall, at the expiration of the period aforesaid, authenticate the said registry in the same manner and form as by law he is now required to do in regard to the registry of slaves.

5. And be it enacted, that the persons making and giving in the returns and lists by this Act directed, shall, on the said 1st day of August 1834, or within 30 days thereafter, appear before the registrar of slaves, or his lawful deputy, and make an affidavit of the truth thereof, in the form set forth at foot of the schedule to this Act annexed.

6. That if the registrar of slaves shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of any such return, he shall summon the party making such return, and also the labourer, respecting whom such doubt shall have arisen, and also any witnesses on behalf of such labourer, and on behalf of the party who may have made such return, to appear before him at a time and place to be appointed by the registrar, who shall then and there proceed to inquire into the accuracy of such return, and for that purpose examine the person making such return, the labourer respecting whom such doubt shall have arisen, as well as any witnesses on behalf of either party; and the registrar may, if necessary, from time to time adjourn such examination, and after full examination the registrar shall either confirm or correct such return as he may see fit, and shall thereupon give notice to the person who may have made such return, and to the apprenticed labourer, of his decision: provided always, that if either the party making such return, or the labourer to whom it may refer, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar, such party may, on his own behalf and the registrar, or any special magistrate may, on the behalf of such labourer, apply to the chief, or to any other judge of the Court of Common Pleas, by petition, setting forth the nature of such decision and the objections thereto; and the judge to whom any auch petition may be preferred shall proceed in any summary way to hear and to decide upon the same; and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

7. That any person neglecting or omitting to make the return or the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned, or to attend the registrar when summoned by him for the purpose aforesaid, shall incur a penalty of not more than 25 l., nor less than 50 s. current money, to be recovered in the manner hereinafter provided; and in the event of the wilful absence of any person so summoned, it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed and to decide any such question as though such party had attended.

8. That the judges of the said court shall make all necessary rules for regulating the proceedings upon every such petition, in the manner which may be most conducive to method, punctuality and dispatch.

9. That when such proceedings as aforesaid shall have taken place, the registrar or his lawful deputy shall amend such return accordingly; and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such registry, or a certified extract thereof, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the fact.

10. That if the registrar or his deputy shall, in the exercise of his said office, refuse or neglect to do anything which he is herein required to do, such registrar or his lawful deputy shall, for every such offence, incur the penalty of 200 l. currency; and shall, moreover, be liable to civil suits or actions of such person or persons as may be aggrieved, or sustain any damage or injury by such refusal or neglect.

11. That the said registrar shall, after the authentication of the returns hereinbefore directed, receive out of any public monies in the treasury the sum of 300 l. current money, for the duties required of him by this Act; and any person or persons requiring a certified copy or copies, or an extract or extracts from the said registry, the registrar is hereby authorized to demand and receive for such copies or extracts at and after the same rate that the registrar of deeds is allowed by his docket for copies or extracts of deeds out of his office.

12. That all and every the fines, forfeitures and penalties imposed by this Act, shall be recovered by bill, plaint or information, in any court of record in this Island, and that one moiety of the said fines shall go to the informer, or person suing for the same, and the other moiety to be paid into the treasury of the Colony, for the public uses thereof.

13. That if any person or persons shall knowingly and wilfully make any false oath to any of the matters or things by this Act required, or shall corruptly procure or suborn any person or persons to make any false oath, such person or persons so making or procuring to be made such false oath as aforesaid, shall be declared guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury, or subornation of perjury, and shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer such punishment as is inflicted for such offences by the laws of England.

AN ACT for the abolition of Slavery in this Island, in consideration of Compensation; and for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves.—(Passed 19th May 1834.) No. 42.

1. WHEREAS an Act has recently passed the Imperial Parliament, intituled, "An Act for the abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves:" and whereas by that Act the sum of twenty millions pounds sterling is appropriated towards compensating the holders of slaves whose property is thereby affected: and whereas, in consideration thereof, it is expedient that a Bill should pass the Legislature of this Island to effect the abolition of slavery; be it therefore enacted, by the Governor and Commander-in-chief of His Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, Saint Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and of the Council and Assembly of this His Majesty's Island of Dominica, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who in conformity with the laws now in force in this Island, shall on or before the 1st day of August 1834, have been duly registered as slaves in this Island, and who on the the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be actually within this Island, and who shall be such registries appear to be, on the said 1st day of August 1834, of the full age of six years, or upwards, shall by force and virtue of this Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers; provided, that for the purposes aforesaid, every slave belonging to this Island, engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas, shall be deemed and taken to be within this Island, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

2. And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer, such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer as would for the time being have been entitled to his or her services as a slave if this Act had not been made.

3. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that all slaves who may at any time previous to the passing of this Act have been taken with the consent of their possessors, and all apprenticed labourers who may hereafter with like consent be taken into any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, shall from and after the passing of this Act be free, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

4. And be it enacted, that all such apprenticed labourers shall, for the purpose of this Act, be divided into three distinct classes; the first of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers, attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners; the second of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes: provided always, that no person of the age of 12 years and upwards shall be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall have been, since the 28th day of August 1832, habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce.

5. And be it further enacted, that no person who by virtue of this Act shall become a prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1840, and that during such his or her apprenticeship no such prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall be bound or liable, by virtue of such apprenticeship, to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, for more than 45 hours in the whole of any one week.

6. And be it further enacted, that no person who by virtue of this Act shall become a non-prædial apprenticed labourer, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1838.

7. And be it further enacted, that if before any such apprenticeship shall have expired, the person or persons entitled for and during the remainder of any such term to the services of such apprenticed labourer, shall be desirous to discharge him or her from such apprenticeship, it shall be lawful for such person or persons so to do by deed poll or instrument in writing, to be proved before a judge or justice of the peace, and recorded in the Secretary's-office of this Island: provided nevertheless, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any such disease, or mental or bodily infirmity as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom.

8. That, in order to prevent the improper discharge of labourers, incompetent from age or disease, to earn their own living, be it enacted, that if any deed or discharge shall be executed gratuitously, and without any valuable consideration passing to the owner or other person effecting the same, the labourer so to be discharged shall, previously to the actual execution of any such deed, appear before any special justice, and if it shall appear to the said special justice that such labourer is under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or is labouring under any habitual disease or infirmity of mind or body, the employer or person effecting such discharge shall, under his or her hand and seal, execute and deliver to the said special justice a good and sufficient bond to His Majesty, in the penal sum of 200 l., with a condition thereunder writtenfor the defeas ance thereof, such labourer shall be properly fed, clothed and maintained until the 1st day of August 1838, in the case of non-prædial labourers, or until the 1st day of August 1840, in case of prædial labourers; and no such gratuitous discharge shall be valid and effectual in the law, or shall be received to be recorded in the office of the secretary of the Island, until such bond aforesaid shall be duly executed, registered and deposited in the said office: provided nevertheless, that the Chief Justice, and in case of his absence any other judge of the Court of Common Pleas, shall be and is hereby declared authorized, by an order under his hand, to dispense with such bond as aforesaid, in any case in which it shall be made to appear to him that neither the welfare of the labourer to be discharged, nor the interest of the Colony at large, requires that such bond shall be so entered into.

9. Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that no such bond as aforesaid shall be required in the case of any discharge by will; but if at the time of the death of the testator, the labourer so discharged shall be under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or labouring under any such disease or infirmity as aforesaid, the estate of such testator shall be liable to and chargeable with the maintenance of such labourer, until the 1st day of August 1838, in the case of a non-prædial labourer, and until the 1st day of August 1840, in the case of a prædial labourer, as fully as if the said testator had in his or her life-time executed such bond as aforesaid: provided always, and be it hereby enacted, that in the event of the discharge of a person as aforesaid, under the age of 14 years, the estate of the testator shall only be liable and bound until such apprenticed labourer attains that age, unless he or she shall at that time be labouring under any habitual disease or infirmity of mind or body as aforesaid.

10. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any such apprenticed labourer to purchase his or her discharge from such apprenticeship, even without the consent, or in opposition, if necessary, to the will of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, upon payment to such person or persons of the appraised value of such services.

11. And be it enacted, that when any apprentice under this Act shall be able and willing to purchase his or her discharge, and the party entitled to the services of such apprentice shall refuse or be unwilling to sell such discharge, such apprentice shall be at liberty to apply to the nearest magistrate, to be appointed by special commission, who shall thereupon give notice to the person entitled to the service of such apprentice, or his or her representative or agent, and such last-mentioned person shall thereupon appoint a justice of the peace of the parish or precinct in or nearest to which the apprentice shall reside, who shall and is hereby required to associate himself with such special justice of the peace, and the said two justices shall also associate with them one other justice of the peace, who is also hereby required to associate himself as aforesaid; and in case the said special justice and general justice of the peace cannot agree on the third justice so to be called in, then the Governor or Commander-in-chief of this Island shall name and appoint such third justice.

12. And be it further enacted, that the said three justices shall meet at the usual place of public business for the parish or precinct, or at such other place as the justices themselves shall appoint, and shall proceed to fix a value upon such apprentice, which valuation shall be binding and conclusive on all parties; and, upon the amount of such valuation being paid to the person entitled to receive the same, or to the public treasurer as hereafter mentioned, such apprentice shall be absolutely discharged from the remainder of the term of apprenticeship, and the three justices shall grant a certificate under their hands in the form following: "We do hereby certify and declare, that A. B., the apprentice of C. D., of the parish of (or otherwise, as the case may be,) hath this day been discharged and released from the remainder of the term of his or her apprenticeship. Given under our hands this day of ." Provided, that notice of the time and place of meeting shall be given to the person entitled to the services of such apprentice, or other person in charge, to be left at his or her usual place of residence at least 10 days before such meeting, and that the said justices shall and may issue their summons to any witness of whose materiality they shall be satisfied, either on the part of the apprentice or the person entitled to his or her services, and shall examine such witnesses on oath touching the value of the services of such apprentice; and in case any person so summoned to attend shall refuse or neglect to attend, the said three justices shall, and they are hereby empowered and required to issue their warrant, authorizing any lawful constable to apprehend and bring any such person so summoned before them, in order that he or she may be examined in the premises.

13. And be it enacted, that in case any person shall, by virtue of any title or interest either in remainder, reversion, expectancy or otherwise, or by virtue of any security, claim any right to the services of the said apprentice for the remainder of the term of his apprenticeship, expectant upon the death of the person then entitled to his or her services, or by virtue of such security, and shall by reason thereof claim a right to participate in the amount paid for the discharge of such apprentice, the said three justices shall direct such amount to be paid to the public treasurer, until the rights of the parties are ascertained and decided, as hereinafter mentioned; and such sum shall bear interest at 6 l. per centum per annum until again paid out, and shall in the meantime be used as the public funds of the Island.

14. And be it enacted, that any party claiming to be entitled to the sum so paid to the public treasurer shall be at liberty to apply, by summary petition or special motion, to any of the supreme courts of judicature of this Island, who shall, upon hearing the matter, adjudge and determine how and to whom such sum of money shall be paid and applied; and such judgment shall be binding and conclusive on all the parties, and the public treasurer shall thereupon pay such amount as the Court shall by their order direct.

15. And be it enacted, that in case the person entitled to the service of any apprentice so applying to be discharged, shall refuse or neglect to appoint a justice, such special justice shall associate with him a general justice of the peace, and such two justices shall thereupon proceed in manner hereinbefore directed, and with the same power as hereinbefore enacted respecting the said three justices.

16. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be subject or liable to be removed from this Island; and that no prædial apprenticed labourer, who may in manner aforesaid become attached to the soil, shall be subject or liable to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, except upon or in or about the works and business of the plantations or estates to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have been attached, or on which he or she shall have been usually employed on or previously to the said 1st day of August 1834: provided nevertheless, that with the consent in writing of any two or more justices of the peace holding special commission, it shall be lawful for the person or persons entitled to the services of any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers, to transfer his or their services to any other estate or plantation within this Island to such person or persons belonging; which written consent in no case shall be given, or be of any validity, unless any such justices of the peace shall first have ascertained that such transfer would not have the effect of separating any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, and that such transfer would not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of such attached prædial apprenticed labourer; and that such consent shall be in the form following: "These are to certify, that upon the application of A. B. for liberty to remove certain prædial attached labourers, according to the provisions of an Act, intituled, 'An Act for the abolition of Slavery in this Island, in consideration of Compensation, and for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves,' we have inquired into the circumstances of the case, and being satisfied that such removal may be made without infringing any of the regulations in the said Act in this respect contained, we do hereby permit the said A. B. to remove the several prædial apprentices named (here name them, setting them out in families where it can be done) from plantation, in the parish of to plantation, in the parish of (or otherwise, as the case may be). Given under our hands, this day of 18 ;" which said certificate shall be recorded in a book to be kept by the public secretary of the Island, and for which service the said public secretary shall receive the sum of 3*s.* and no more; and such record, or a copy thereof, certified by such secretary, shall be received and taken as evidence in all courts.

17. And be it further enacted, that the laws now in force as to the alienation by sale, and as to the inheritance and bequest of slaves, shall during the time of apprenticeship, so far as the same may be applicable to the interest of the persons entitled to the services of all apprenticed labourers, and which interest shall and may pass by sale, inheritance or will in such manner as slaves could or might pass by the laws in force in this Island: provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall be removed from his or her usual place of abode for the purpose of any judicial sale; and in case of attached prædial labourers, such sales shall not take place but together with the land.

18. And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of any such apprenticeship as aforesaid, the person or persons for the time being entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer shall be, and is and are hereby required to supply him or her with such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as by an Act, intituled "An Act for the further Encouragement, Protection and better Government of Slaves, and for the general Amelioration of their Condition," now in force in this Island, an owner is required to supply to and for any slave being of the same age and sex as any such apprenticed labourer shall be.

19. And be it further enacted, that, subject to the obligations imposed by this Act upon such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, all and every the persons who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be holden in slavery within this Island shall, upon and from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, become and be, to all intents and purposes, free and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted; and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, shall in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the said 1st day of August 1834 slavery shall be and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished and declared unlawful in His Majesty's Island of Dominica.

20. And whereas it may happen that children who have not attained the age of six years on the said 1st day of August 1834, or that children who after that day may be born to any female apprenticed labourers, may not be properly supported by their parents, and no other person may be disposed voluntarily to undertake the support of such children, and it is necessary that provision should be made for the maintenance of such children in any such contingency; be it therefore enacted, that if any child on the said 1st day of August 1834 had not completed his or her sixth year, or if any child to which any female apprenticed labourer may give birth on or after the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be brought before any justice of the peace holding special commission, and if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of such justice that any such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, and that such child hath not completed his or her age of twelve years, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required, on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother; but in case it shall be made to appear to any such justice that such person or persons aforesaid is or are unable or unfit to enter into such indenture, and properly to perform the conditions thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is thereby required by such indenture, to bind any such child to any other person or persons to be by him for that purpose approved, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and it shall by every such indenture of apprenticeship be declared whether such child shall thenceforward belong to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, labourers, or to the class of unattached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers; and the term of such apprenticeship of any such child shall by such indenture be limited and made to continue in force until such child shall have completed his or her twenty-first year, and no longer; and every child so apprenticed as aforesaid by the order of any such justice of the peace as aforesaid, shall, during his or her apprenticeship, be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work or labour to be by them done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be to him or her furnished, as any other such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid: provided always, that the said indenture of apprenticeship shall contain sufficient words of obligation upon the employer to allow reasonable time and opportunity for the education and religious instruction of such child.

21. And be it further enacted, that the several justices of the peace having special commissions (and no other magistrate or justice of the peace in this Island) shall have, exercise and enjoy a sole and exclusive jurisdiction over, and shall solely and exclusively take cognizance of all offences committed or alleged to have been committed by any such apprenticed labourer, or by his or her employer, in such their relation to each other; or of the breach, violation or neglect of any of the obligations owed by them to each other; or of any question, matter or thing incident to, or arising out of, the relations subsisting between such apprenticed labourers and the persons respectively entitled to their services: provided, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the supreme courts of record, or the superior courts of civil and criminal justice in this Island.

22. And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons entitled to the services of any such apprenticed labourer, or any other person or persons other than such justices of the peace, holding such special commissions as aforesaid, to punish any such apprenticed labourer for any offence by him or her committed, by the whipping, beating or imprisonment of his or her person, or by any other personal or other correction or punishment whatever, or by an addition to the hours of labour hereinbefore limited; nor shall any court, judge or justice of the peace punish any such apprenticed labourer, being a female, for any offence by her committed, by whipping or beating her person: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall extend to exempt any apprenticed labourer from the operation of any law or police regulation for the prevention or punishment of any offence which is or shall hereafter be in force in this Island in respect to all other persons of free condition.

23. And whereas it is necessary that proper regulations should be provided for the maintenance of order and good discipline among the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer; and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter, for any hired service during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer; and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers; and for the prevention or punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers, injuring, or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer; and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance of the laws, on the part of any such apprenticed labourers, and for preventing the escape from this Island of any such apprenticed labourers during their term of apprenticeship: Be it therefore enacted, that all such offences shall be tried in a summary manner before any justice appointed by special commission; and any apprenticed labourer convicted of absenting himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, without reasonable cause, he or she shall be compelled to serve, for every hour of such absence, two extra hours, provided that such extra hours shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week.

24. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted as aforesaid of being absent without reasonable cause, for more than one day, shall in like manner forfeit not exceeding two days' labour of his or her own time: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the special justice before whom such complaint shall have been heard, on which he shall have adjudged that the said apprentice shall forfeit two days' labour of his or her own time, and he is hereby authorized and required so to divide the said two days' labour as shall not impose the obligation on such apprentice of working for more than 15 extra hours in any one week.

25. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer, convicted as aforesaid of being absent without reasonable cause for two succeeding days, or on two distinct days within the same fortnight, shall be adjudged a deserter, and sentenced to hard labour for a period not exceeding one week, or to any penal gang of the Island, or to receive a flogging not exceeding 15 stripes.

26. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer, convicted as aforesaid of being absent without reasonable cause for three or more successive days, or for three distinct days, during any one fortnight, shall be adjudged a vagabond, and sentenced to hard labour for a period not exceeding 14 days, or to any penal gang of the Island, or to receive a flogging not exceeding 30 stripes.

27. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted, as aforesaid of being absent without roasonable cause for one entire week, or any longer time, shall, in addition addition to such punishment by hard labour as aforesaid, be further sentenced to receive, as any justice appointed by special commission shall direct, any number of stripes not exceeding 30.

28. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be found wandering as a vagrant beyond the limits of the plantation of his or her employer, without a written permission from such employer, and who shall not be able to give a satisfactory account of himself or herself, shall be liable to be apprehended, and upon conviction before any special justice aforesaid, shall be adjudged a vagabond, and sentenced accordingly: provided, that nothing in this clause contained shall be applied to apprenticed labourers on their way to or from any place of divine worship, or to or from market, or at such market or place: provided, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or construed to abridge or in anywise interfere with the full and free use and enjoyment by such apprentices of the time allotted to them as their own, under and by virtue or the provisions of this Act.

29. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall refuse or neglect to perform any labour required under this Act, or who shall, by wilful negligence, damage the property of his or her employer, or who shall be guilty of drunkenness, or of fighting, shall, upon conviction thereof as aforesaid, forfeit to such employer any number of days' labour not exceeding four, out of his or her own time, or be sentenced to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 20, and for the second offence within one month, shall be sentenced to double that amount of punishment: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the special justice before whom such complaint shall have been heard, on which he shall have adjudged that the said apprentice shall forfeit three days' labour of his or her own time, and he is hereby authorized and required so to divide the said three days' labour as shall not impose the obligation on such apprentice of working for more than 15 hours in any one week.

30. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be convicted, as aforesaid, of insolence or insubordination to his or her employer, shall be sentenced to hard labour, or to any penal gang of the Island, for any time not exceeding two weeks, or to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 39.

31. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall, by the careless use of fire, endanger the property of his or her employer, or of any other person, or who shall ill-use any cattle, or other stock, or who shall wantonly destroy or injure the property of his or her employer, entrusted to his or her charge, shall, upon conviction thereof, as aforesaid, be sentenced either to extra labour in his employer's service for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30 lashes, or to any two or more such punishments.

32. And be it further enacted, that in case of any riot or combined resistance to the laws on the part of any three or more apprenticed labourers, the police of the parish, or of any neighbouring parish, shall, on receiving information thereof, immediately repair to the spot, and act as shall be directed by any special justice, for the repression of any such riot or lawless proceedings; and all apprenticed labourers engaged in any such riot shall, on conviction thereof as aforesaid, be sentenced to hard labour as aforesaid, for any term not exceeding three months, or to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 39.

33. And be it further enacted, that any special justice resorting to or present at any such riotous assemblage, shall cause a flag, or some other appropriate signal, to be approved of by the Governor, to be exhibited as a warning to all persons there present to separate and quietly disperse; and all apprenticed labourers who after the exhibition of such flag or signal, shall not immediately disperse, shall, on conviction thereof before any two or more special justices, be sentenced to hard labour as aforesaid for any term not exceeding three months, and to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 39: provided, that in the event of the unavoidable absence of such special justice, nothing herein contained shall be taken to prevent any justice of the peace from quelling any riot or disturbance among such apprentices in the same way and by the same means as by law he is now authorized to use in quelling any riot, or preventing any breach of the peace among or by any of His Majesty's free subjects in this Island: And be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer to keep, use, or have in his or her possession any gunpowder, gun, swords, pistols, or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapons, unless with the knowledge and consent of his or her master, employer, or manager.

34. And be it enacted, that every apprentice so offending shall, on conviction before any special justice, be punished with whipping, imprisonment, hard labour in the penal gang, or any two or more of these punishments, as may be awarded by such special justice: provided, that such whipping shall not exceed 39 lashes, and such imprisonment shall not exceed one month.

35. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any such master, manager, or lawful employer, to seize and retain any gunpowder, guns, swords, pistols, or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapon unlawfully in the possession of any apprenticed labourer, to be disposed of as any special magistrate may direct.

36. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer quitting or attempting to quit the Island without the permission in writing of his or her employer, shall, on conviction thereof before any special justice, be sentenced to hard labour, or to the penal gang of the Island,

Island, for a term not exceeding three months, or to receive any number of stripes not exceeding 39.

37. And be it further enacted, that in cases wherein any apprenticed labourer shall have been convicted of having absented himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, without reasonable cause, for more than one day at a time, during 14 days, such time so lost to such employer shall be made up to him or her by such apprenticed labourer out of his or her own time, not exceeding 15 hours in each week: provided, that such extra service or compensation shall not be compellable after the expiration of seven years.

38. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, by wilful neglect or indolence during his or her own time, suffer his or her house or provision ground to fall into decay and bad order, it shall and may be lawful for the employer of such apprenticed labourer, with the sanction in writing of any special justice, to be obtained upon proof before him of such neglect or indolence, to put the house or provision ground of such apprenticed labourer into proper order for his or her comfort and support, and to deduct an equivalent quantity of labour from his or her own time, not exceeding 15 hours in any week.

39. And be it further enacted, that on every plantation the special justices shall appoint one or more of the apprenticed labourers thereon, with the consent of the master or manager, to be constables, who shall be empowered to maintain peace and order on such plantation, under the directions of the proprietor or manager thereof, and to secure and place in confinement any apprenticed labourer who shall commit any offence on such plantation, or any apprenticed labourer not employed on such plantation who may be found loitering thereon without the knowledge or permission of the proprietor or manager thereof; such apprentice, confined as aforesaid, not to be kept in custody longer than shall be necessary to procure the attendance of the special justice: provided always, that if the attendance of the special justice cannot be procured within 24 hours, it shall and may be lawful for the proprietor or manager aforesaid to order the release of such apprentice so confined as aforesaid, after the expiration of 24 hours: provided nevertheless, that in the event of such apprentice being discharged as aforesaid, the proprietor or manager shall, and he is hereby required to prefer the complaint on which such apprentice was confined before the special justice when he shall next come upon the estate: and provided, that nothing shall be construed to give any such constable any power or authority over any of His Majesty's subjects except such apprenticed labourers.

40. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer or labourers shall resort to a special justice to complain against his, her or their employer, and that such complaint shall be adjudged frivolous or groundless, it shall be lawful for such special justice to punish such complaining parties by adjudging them to repay double the extent of time which may have been lost to his or her employer, not exceeding 15 hours in any one week, or such other punishment by stripes not exceeding 20.

41. And be it enacted, that for all offences where punishment by flogging is authorized to be awarded by this Act, it shall be lawful for the special justices, in case such offences shall be committed by females, to sentence such females to solitary confinement, or confinement in the stocks, for any period not exceeding six days, such stocks to be according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the Governor.

42. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any special justice to substitute solitary confinement, or confinement in the stocks, in any case where punishment by flogging or hard labour is hereinbefore directed, provided such solitary confinement or confinement in the stocks shall not exceed, for any offence, and at any one time, six days.

43. Be it further enacted, that in all cases of solitary confinement or confinement in the stocks, the person so confined shall be fed on such diet as the special justice shall direct, and no other.

44. And be it enacted, that all other inferior misdemeanors, and other crimes committed by apprenticed labourers against each other, or against the person entitled to his or her service, or against any other person, and not hereinbefore specified, shall be heard and determined before any justice appointed by special commission, reasonable notice of the time and place of such trial being given to the person complained against; and such justice, upon conviction of such apprentice, shall order and direct such punishment to be inflicted as he may think proper, not exceeding 39 lashes, nor three months' imprisonment, with hard labour, or 20 days' solitary confinement, or confinement in the stocks for any period not exceeding six days: provided, that nothing in this clause contained shall be taken to authorize such magistrate to sentence any female apprentice to be flogged or beaten: and provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to deprive any of His Majesty's subjects of his or her right to proceed against any such apprentice in any of the courts of civil or criminal justice of this Island, for remedy against any apprentice for any wrong or injury done to or committed against the person or property of such subject: and provided also, that when any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted of indolence or neglect, or improper performance of work, the special justice before whom such conviction shall take place, may, if he see fit, sentence the offender, either alone or in addition to the punishment by flogging or hard labour hereinbefore directed, to labour for any such number of hours or days in his or her own time, for the benefit of the person entitled to his or her services, as the justice of the case may seem to require, not exceeding 15 hours in any one week.

 45. And

45. And be it further enacted, that in cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourer is supplied not by the delivery to him or her of provision, but by the cultivation by such prædial apprenticed labourer of grounds set apart for the growth of provisions, the persons entitled to their services shall, and are hereby required, during the term of such apprenticeship, and no longer, to provide such prædial apprenticed labourer with ground adequate, both in quality and quantity, for his or her support, and within a reasonable distance from his or her usual place of abode, under a penalty not exceeding 10 l. for each offence.

46. And whereas it is necessary that proper regulations should be made and established as to the extent of such provision grounds hereinbefore mentioned, and as to the distance at which such grounds may be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourer; be it enacted, that, for the purposes of this Act, all grounds hitherto allotted to every slave during such his or her state of slavery, for his or her maintenance and support, shall, during the term of his or her apprenticeship, in quantity, quality and locality be deemed adequate and proper for the maintenance and support of every prædial apprenticed labourer, unless good and sufficient cause be shown to the contrary: provided, and be it enacted, that such prædial or non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall satisfy, in case of complaint, such special justice that he or she has kept his or her ground in a due and proper state of cultivation.

47. And whereas by the Act of the Imperial Parliament it is provided, that such prædial apprenticed labourer shall be allowed out of the time, at the rate of 45 hours per week, which the master or employer is entitled to from such labourer, such a portion of time as shall be adequate for the proper cultivation of his or her provision ground, and for the raising and securing the crops thereon grown; be it enacted, that from and after the 1st day of August next every prædial apprenticed labourer shall be entitled to four hours and one half of an hour out of the 45 weekly working hours hereinbefore mentioned, for the cultivation of his or her grounds; and such portion of time shall be allowed to each apprentice, either on any day or days in any one week, or by any number of days consecutively, at such period of the year as may be deemed by the employer or manager of such property least detrimental and injurious to the cultivation of the plantation on which he or she shall reside, and the gathering in of the crops and the manufacture of the produce thereof; and any person entitled to the service of any such prædial apprenticed labourer, who shall refuse or neglect to allow such portion of time to any such labourer, shall be subject and liable to a penalty of 40 s. for each offence, to be recovered as hereinbefore provided: provided always, that such number of days so allowed to the apprenticed labourer, shall not exceed three consecutive days at one time: provided, and it shall and may be lawful for the employer and the apprentice to enter into an agreement in writing, of which a copy shall be given to the apprentice, to pay to the said apprentice such sum as may be agreed on between them, in lieu of time: and provided also, that in the event of non-payment of the sum agreed on at such times as shall be stipulated in the said agreement, it shall and may be lawful for the special justice, on the application of the apprentice, of which the employer shall have due notice, to issue a warrant against the goods of such employer for the amount of the money due at the time of such application, which warrant any constable is hereby required to execute, and make sale of the goods so taken under the warrant, unless the amount for which the same is issued shall be paid within three days, and the money to be received or levied under such warrant shall, immediately after the receipt thereof by such constable, be paid over to the said apprentice.

48. And whereas in certain parts of this Island there may not be lands proper for the cultivation of provisions, or by reason of long continuance of dry weather or other casualty, the grounds hitherto appropriated for negro grounds may be rendered unproductive; be it enacted, that in such case the master, owner or other person entitled to the service of such apprenticed labourer shall, by some other ways and means, make good and ample provision for all such apprenticed labourers to whose services they shall be entitled, in order that they may be properly supported and maintained, under a penalty not exceeding 40 s. for each offence: provided always, that in such case no diminution of the 45 hours, as hereinbefore-mentioned, shall take place.

49. And be it further enacted, that all complaints made by an apprenticed labourer against the person entitled to his or her services, touching any fraud practised, or refusal or neglect to furnish any such apprenticed labourer with sufficiency of provision ground, or of other means of maintenance and support, in cases where such apprentice has no provision ground, or of illegally and improperly withholding from such apprentice any portion of the time allowed him or her to cultivate such ground, or of imposing task-work on any apprenticed labourer contrary to the provisions of this Act, or of breach of any contract on the part of any person engaging the voluntary services of an apprenticed labourer, or of any cruelty, injustice, or other wrong or injury done to or inflicted upon any apprenticed labourer by the person entitled to his or her services, shall be heard, adjudged and determined before any one or more special justice or justices, and he or they is or are hereby empowered to punish any offender in any of these respects last mentioned with a fine not exceeding 10 l.; and for default of goods and chattels whereon to levy such fine, the offender shall be committed to gaol until he or she shall pay or satisfy the same, but such imprisonment shall not exceed five days: provided, that nothing herein mentioned shall be deemed or taken to bar or destroy the right of an apprenticed labourer to proceed in the supreme courts of civil or criminal justice for any wrong or injury done to or committed against his or her property or person, by any person whomsoever.

50. And

50. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in cases where it shall be necessary for the cultivation of any plantation, sugar work or other settlement, or for gathering in or manufacturing the crops and produce thereof, to impose task-work on the prædial apprenticed labourers thereof, or working thereupon, it shall be lawful for any special justice to sanction such task-work; provided such apprenticed labourers, or a majority of the adults among them, shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake the same.

51. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any employer and apprenticed labourer mutually to contract together for work to be done, either by the day or by the task, for such wages or consideration as they may agree upon: provided always, that such contracts or engagements shall be sanctioned by a special justice, and that no such agreement shall be for a longer period than one year, and that no task-work shall be imposed upon any body of apprenticed labourers except by consent of a majority thereof.

52. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all indentures of apprenticeship of children required by this Act shall be as nearly as the nature of the case will admit, in conformity with, and upon the same terms and conditions as indentures of apprenticeship of children, made by the parochial or municipal authorities in any parish or town in England, and shall be approved of by such special justice, and recorded in the Secretary's-office of this Island.

53. And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer, being in good health and able to work, and being the father of a child under the age of 12 years, shall not make adequate provision for the subsistence of such child, and which child the special justice has been unable to apprentice as directed by the last clause of this Act, then and in such case it shall be lawful for any special magistrate to adjudge any such labourer to hard labour during such time as the said labourer is not compelled to work in the service of his or her employer, and to apply the earnings of such labourer towards the support and maintenance of any such child; and for that purpose such special justice may hire out the labour of any such father to any person who may be willing to agree for the same, or to labour on any public works, on the best terms which can be procured; but such compulsory labour as aforesaid shall not be continued longer than may be necessary to provide for the maintenance of the child of such labourer for one month in advance.

54. And be it also enacted, that in case any such child so unprovided for as aforesaid shall have no father living, then the regulations aforesaid shall apply to the mother of such child, if competent by her labour to provide for the maintenance of such child.

55. And be it further enacted, that all the penalties before denounced in cases of indolence, neglect of work or otherwise, in respect of labour to be performed by the apprenticed labourers in the service of their employers, shall apply to the case of labour to be ordered to be undertaken for the maintenance of any such child as aforesaid.

56. And be it further enacted, that if any labourer shall, without lawful authority enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty, or to any person, any special justice, applied to for that purpose, shall dispossess such labourer from such land, and from any buildings thereon erected, and cause the same, with all crops growing thereupon, to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not within one month after such seizure appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the special justice shall order the crops, cattle, and other goods seized thereupon to be sold, and the proceeds of such sales to be paid over to the public treasurer of the Colony.

57. And be it further enacted, that the summary process aforesaid shall not be taken in any case where any such apprenticed labourer may have been for two years in the undisturbed possession of any such land.

58. And be it further enacted, that the special justice may further adjudge any apprenticed labourer unlawfully taking possession of such land, to imprisonment with hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months, if it should be made to appear to his satisfaction that such possession was taken fraudulently, and with the knowledge of the labourer that he had no lawful claim to such possession.

59. And whereas it is necessary that provision should be made for ensuring promptitude and dispatch, and for preventing all unnecessary expense, in discharge, by the justices holding special commissions, of the jurisdiction and authorities by this Act committed to them, and for enabling such justices to decide in a summary way such questions as may be brought before them in that capacity, and for the division of this Island into districts, for the purposes of such jurisdiction, and for the frequent and punctual visitation, by such special justices, of the apprenticed labourers within their districts; and it is also necessary that regulations should be made for indemnifying and protecting such special justices of the peace in the upright execution and discharge of their duties; be it therefore enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the Governor, or person exercising the functions of Governor of this Island, shall and he is hereby authorized, required and empowered to make division of the Island into districts for the purposes of this Act, which division shall be made and set out by metes and bounds, to be laid down and expressed by the Governor; and which division and districts shall be made known and be publicly signified by proclamation to be issued for that purpose.

60. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the special justices to be appointed for such districts, or some other special justice, shall visit such plantation, sugar work, or settlement within such district, upon or to which there shall be attached or upon which there shall be working any number of prædial apprenticed labourers exceeding 20, one one day at least in every 14 days, and oftener if required, for the purpose of hearing and determining the several matters and things by this Act declared to be within their authority and jurisdiction; and such special justices shall for that purpose have full and free ingress and egress into and out of all such plantations, sugar-works, or other settlements, without hindrance or molestation, at any time between sunrise and sunset; and shall also have power, for the purpose of investigating any complaint, to cause to be brought before him any of the apprenticed labourers belonging to or upon the said plantation, sugar-work, or other settlement; and shall have such powers to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses, in cases of compulsory discharge from apprenticeship; and such special justice may, if he pass sentence of confinement upon such apprentice, and if he shall see fit, direct that confinement shall take place upon the plantation or settlement to which such apprentice shall belong, or be then working upon.

61. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer working upon or attached to or living at any plantation or settlement upon which there shall be less than 20 apprentices, shall be at liberty to carry an offending apprentice before any special justice, at the plantation or settlement at which such special justice shall sit by virtue of this Act, nearest to the place where the offences shall have been committed, or to any place within the district where such special justice shall sit; provided such place shall be nearer than any plantation or settlement at which such special justice shall so sit; and any apprenticed labourer attached to or working upon or living at any plantation or settlement upon which there are less than 20 apprentices, may in like manner prefer his or her complaint, for any offences committed against him or her, before the special justice at the plantation or settlement at which such special justice shall sit, nearest to the place where such offence shall have been committed, or to any place within the district where such special justice shall sit; provided, as aforesaid, that such place shall be nearer than any plantation or settlement at which such special justice shall so sit; provided, that when and as soon as police stations shall be appointed, under and by virtue of any Act of the Governor, Council and Assembly of this Island, in any such districts, all such offences committed by and against apprentices upon plantations or settlements having less than 20 apprentices, may be heard and determined before such special justice at such station-house.

62. And be it further enacted, that any such apprenticed labourer, who shall during his or her apprenticeship wilfully absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, for a period exceeding three months at any one time, may be sentenced by any special justice, either to serve his or her employer, after the expiration of his or her apprenticeship, for so long a time as he or she shall have so absented himself or herself from such service, or to make satisfaction to his or her employer for the loss sustained by such absence (except so far as he or she shall have made satisfaction for such absence, either out of such extra hours as aforesaid, or otherwise); provided, that such extra service or compensation shall not be compellable after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such apprentice.

63. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or compellable to labour on Sundays, except in works of necessity, or in tending of cattle; nor shall any apprenticed labourer, except as aforesaid, be liable to be hindered or prevented from attending anywhere on Sundays for religious worship, at his or her free will or pleasure, but shall be at full liberty so to do, without any let, denial or interruption whatsoever.

64. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, no person whosoever shall, on Sunday, expose for sale in any market or other place, or in any shop or other place, any goods, wares or merchandize, or provisions, under a penalty not exceeding 5 l. for every offence; provided, that in case the goods or provisions so exposed for sale shall not exceed in value the sum of 5 l., the same may, in lieu of such penalty, be forfeited by order of any justice of the peace for the benefit of the poor of the parish in which such offence is committed; and provided also, that nothing herein shall extend to prevent the keeping open of any druggist shop, tavern, lodging-house, or the sale of fresh meat, fresh fish or milk, on Sunday; such sale, however, not to take place in any town or village during the celebration of Divine Service therein; and that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, Saturday in each week shall be the day given to every prædial labourer; provided, that prædial labourers employed in works of necessity, tending cattle, domestic services and protecting property, shall have some other day in lieu of Saturday.

65. And be it enacted, that in all cases of urgent necessity it shall be lawful for the owner, or other persons in management of such property where such necessity shall occur, to require and compel the immediate and continued service of any or all the apprenticed labourers during such emergency.

66. And be it enacted, that no such apprenticed labourer shall, during the continuance of such their apprenticeship, be liable to be arrested or imprisoned for debt, or be liable to be called on or be competent to serve in the militia of this Island, or to serve as a juror.

67. And be it enacted, that all such apprenticed labourers shall, during the term of such their apprenticeship, be and they are hereby disqualified from being elected members of Assembly, or churchwardens, or of voting at any election for any of the offices aforesaid, or being appointed justices of the peace.

68. And

68. And be it further enacted, that if any slave or slaves shall be guilty of any offence not triable under an Act intituled, "An Act for the further Encouragement, Protection and better Government of Slaves, and for the general Amelioration of their Condition," and not brought to trial before the 1st day of August 1834, it shall and may be lawful to bring such slave or slaves to trial under and by virtue of the powers and provisions of this Act, and to award such punishment as the law provides.

69. And be it enacted, that if any suit or action shall be commenced against any special justice, in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done by virtue and in pursuance thereof, and the Court shall give judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff shall by that judgment be condemned to pay treble costs of suit.

70. And be it further enacted, that if in any suit or action such justice shall at any time before final judgment tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury in respect of which the same be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred; and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept such amends and costs of suit; then, upon proof made to the Court, at the trial of such suit, that such amends have been so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff in the amount of the sum so tendered, subject, nevertheless, to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the defendant.

71. And be it enacted, that no suit or action shall be brought against any such justice in respect of any matter or thing by him done under or in pursuance thereof, unless the same shall be commenced within six months after the cause of action occurred.

72. And be it enacted, that all fines and penalties imposed by this Act, shall be recovered before any special justice of the peace by warrant of distress, and sale of offender's goods and chattels, to be applied for the use of the public of this Island.

73. And be it also enacted, that every such special justice shall keep a journal of all cases brought before him, such journal to be kept in one uniform manner, to be prescribed for that purpose by the Governor, a duplicate of which journal shall be transmitted by him to the Governor at the end of every quarter.

74. And be it further enacted, that the said special justice shall issue all necessary summonses, warrants and commitments, and draw up all convictions and other necessary and sufficient documents for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned; and he is hereby vested with all and every necessary authority to enable him to carry into effect the several duties hereby imposed upon him, according to the true intent and meaning of the various provisions of this Act.

75. And be it further enacted, that if any person or persons shall knowingly and wilfully make any false oath to any of the matters or things by this Act required, or shall corruptly procure or suborn any person or persons to make any false oath, such person or persons so making or procuring to be made such false oath as aforesaid, shall be declared guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury, and shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer such punishment as is inflicted for such offence by the laws of England.

76. And be it enacted, that a certain statute, made in the 52d year of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to repeal certain Acts, and amend other Acts relating to Religious Worship and Assemblies, and Persons teaching or preaching therein," shall be, and is hereby declared to be in force in this Island: provided nevertheless, that any two or more justices of the peace holding special commission under the 3d & 4th Will. 4, c. 73, shall have, exercise and enjoy all and every the jurisdiction, powers and authorities whatsoever which, by force and virtue of the said Act, are within the realm of England had and exercised and enjoyed by the several justices of the peace, and by the court of sessions therein mentioned.

77. And be it further enacted, that within the meaning and for the purposes of this Act, every person who shall have the lawful direction or charge of any apprenticed labourer, shall be deemed and taken to be the employer of such apprenticed labourer.

78. And be it further enacted, that within the meaning and for the purposes of this Act, every person who for the time being shall be in the lawful administration of the government of this Island, shall be taken to be the Governor thereof.

79. And be it enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained, by any other Act or Acts to be passed this Session.

AN ACT for the Abolition of Slavery in the Island of Saint Vincent and its Dependencies, in consideration of Compensation, and for promoting the Industry and good conduct of the Manumitted Slaves.—(Passed 2d April 1834.)

Preamble:

WHEREAS an Act has recently passed the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves:"

And whereas in consequence of such Act, it is necessary not only that provision should be made for promoting the industry and securing the good conduct of the persons so to be manumitted, but also that the laws now in force in these Islands should forthwith be adapted to the new state and relations of society which will follow upon such general manumission as aforesaid of the said slaves:

And whereas it has been provided in the said recited Act, that the sum of twenty millions pounds sterling should be given to the persons entitled to the services of such slaves, towards compensation for the loss which they will incur by their being deprived of their right to such services:

And whereas in consideration of such compensation, it is necessary that a Bill should pass the Legislature of these Islands to effect those purposes:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lieutenant Governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Vincent and its Dependencies, humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who in conformity with the laws now in force in these Islands shall, on or before the 1st day of August 1834, have been duly registered as slaves, and who on the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be actually within these Islands, and who shall by such registry appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834 of the full age of six years or upwards shall, by force and virtue of this Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers; provided that for the purposes aforesaid, every slave belonging to these Islands engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas, shall be deemed and taken to be within these Islands, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

All persons of the age of six years or upwards, and duly registered on the 1st of August 1834 as Slaves, to become Apprentices.

The person who held the Apprentice as a Slave entitled to his services.

2. And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer, such person shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer as would for the time being have been entitled to his services as a slave if this Act had not been made.

Slaves taken to the United Kingdom, free.

3. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that all slaves within these Islands, who may at any time previous to the passing of this Act have been taken with the consent of their possessors, and all apprenticed labourers who may hereafter, with the like consent, be taken into any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, shall from and after the passing of this Act be absolutely and entirely free, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

Apprenticed Labourers divided into three classes.

4. And be it enacted, that all such apprenticed labourers shall, for the purpose of this Act, be divided into three distinct classes; the first of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons, who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners; the second of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes, consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes: provided always, that no persons of the age of twelve years and upwards shall be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall for 12 calendar months at the least next before the passing of the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, have been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or employed in prædial labour.

Apprenticeships of prædials to cease on the 1st August 1840, and no prædial to labour more than 45 hours in the week for his employer.

5. And be it further enacted, that no person who by virtue of this Act shall become a prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1840; and that during such apprenticeship, no such prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall be bound or liable, by virtue of such apprenticeship, to perform any labour in the service of his employer for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week.

6. And

Apprenticeships of non-prædials to cease on the 1st August 1838.

6. And be it further enacted, that no person who by virtue of this Act shall become a non-prædial apprenticed labourer, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1838.

Apprentices may be discharged from their apprenticeships.

7. And be it further enacted, that if before any such apprenticeship shall have expired, the person entitled for and during the remainder of any such term to the services of such apprenticed labourer, shall be desirous to discharge him from such apprenticeship, it shall be lawful for such person so to do by deed poll or instrument in writing, to be by him for that purpose made and executed, and which shall be acknowledged before the register of deeds, and recorded in his office: provided nevertheless, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any such disease or mental or bodily infirmity as may render him incapable of earning his subsistence, then and in every such case the person so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom.

If 50 years of age or upwards at the time of discharge, employers to provide for their support.

Proceedings where apprentices are desirous of purchasing the term of their apprenticeships and obstacles are in the way.

8. And to provide for the release of the services of labourers desiring to obtain the same by purchase, in cases where the employers of such labourers may be unwilling or unable to contract for such release, it is hereby further enacted, that if the employer of any apprenticed labourer in any of these Islands, or any person having an interest in any such labourer, shall be unwilling to effect his release, or if the employer or any other person having a charge upon, or interest in, any such labourer, shall be a minor or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or if the person entitled to the services of any such labourer shall be absent from these Islands, or if the employer of any such labourer shall demand as the price of his release a greater sum of money than may appear to the special justice to be the fair and just value thereof, then and in each and every of the cases aforesaid, the chief justice of the Island, or in case of his death, absence or disability, the next judge in commission, on application to him for that purpose made by the special justice, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer of such labourer to appear before him by himself or his agents at some convenient time and place, to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published by the said special justice in the public Gazette of this Island, of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid, and in such notice all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the labourer proposed to be released, either in their own right, or as the agents, guardians, trustees or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claim.

Proceedings to be had before the Chief Justice and appraisers appointed.

9. And be it further enacted, that at the time appointed for any such meeting as aforesaid, the chief justice or other judge as aforesaid of the Island, in the presence of the special justice of the district in which such labourer is resident, and also in the presence of the employer of the labourer proposed to be released, or his agent, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer or his agent, shall proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged by the said special justice, and by the employer or his agent, or other person claiming any interest in the services of the said labourer proposed to be released and attending in pursuance of any such notice; and the said chief justice or other judge as aforesaid shall require the special justice, and the employer of such labourer or his agent, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of his services, and the said chief justice or other judge as aforesaid shall himself nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer or his agent, being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or attending shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said chief justice or other judge as aforesaid shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such employer or his agent.

Appraisers to make a return of their valuation in seven days.

10. And be it further enacted, that the appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid shall be duly sworn by and before the said chief justice or other judge as aforesaid, to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the services of the labourer so proposed to be released, and within seven days next after such their appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the said services of the said labourer, and shall certify such their valuation to the said chief justice or other judge as aforesaid, under their hands and seals; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said chief justice or other judge as aforesaid within the said term of seven days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall within the next succeeding seven days certify his valuation to the said chief justice or other judge as aforesaid; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or in their default by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and inrolled among the records in the Register's Office of the said Island; and the said labourers whose services are so appraised, shall immediately pay down the whole of their appraised value in gold and silver money unto the person entitled to receive the same; and if the money be not immediately paid, all the proceedings shall be and are hereby declared to be null and void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and the inrolment aforesaid shall not take place.

Upon failure umpire to make such valuation.

Labourers to pay down their appraised value.

Apprentices not liable to be removed without consent of special justice.

11. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourers belonging to these Islands, shall be subject or liable to be removed therefrom, and that no prædial apprenticed labourer who may in manner aforesaid, become attached to the soil, shall be subject or liable to perform perform any labour in the service of his employer except upon or in or about the works and business of the plantations or estates to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have been attached, or on which he shall have been usually employed on or previously to the 1st day of August 1834: provided nevertheless, that with the consent in writing of any one of the justices of the peace holding such special commissions as hereinafter mentioned, it shall be lawful for the person entitled to the services of any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer, to transfer his services to any other estate or plantation within these Islands to such person belonging; which written consent shall in no case be given, or be of any validity, unless any such justice of the peace shall first have ascertained that such transfer would not have the effect of separating any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, except with the consent of the party to be removed, and that such transfer would not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of such attached prædial apprenticed labourer; and such consent shall be recorded in a book to be kept by the special justice of the district to which such labourers shall be removed, and which consent shall be in form following:—"These are to certify that upon the application of A. B. for liberty to remove certain prædial attached labourers [naming them] according to the provisions of this Act, I have assented thereto. C. D., Special Justice."

Nor to be separated from husband, wife, parent or child.

Services of apprentices real estate.

12. And be it further enacted, that the services of all such apprenticed labourers shall and are hereby declared to be real estate, and not chattels, and shall descend unto the heir of the person dying seised thereof according to the custom and manner of inheritance held in fee simple, and widows shall be capable of being endowed thereof: provided always, that any executor or administrator may inventory the said labourers, but not take them into his custody, to the intent that if there be not sufficient goods and chattels to pay the debts of the deceased, the residue of the services of the said labourers shall be taken and sold by such executor or administrator for the payment of the said debts, and be chattels for that purpose, and not otherwise.

Services of apprentices transferable by bargain and sale.

13. And be it further enacted and declared, that the right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed or conveyance, in the same manner as real estate passes, or is transferred according to the laws of these Islands; provided, that no such apprenticed labourer shall, by virtue of any such bargain and sale, contract, deed or conveyance, be subject or liable to be separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him, except with the consent of the party whose services are proposed to be sold or transferred.

No market to be held or goods sold on Sunday.

14. And be it further enacted, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, no person whosoever shall on Sunday expose for sale in any market or other place, or in any shop or other place, any goods, wares or merchandize, or provisions, under a penalty not exceeding 5 l. for every offence; provided, that in case the goods or provisions so exposed for sale, shall not exceed in value the sum of 5 l., the same may, in lieu of such penalty, be forfeited by order of any justice of the peace, for the benefit of the poor of the parish in which such offence is committed: And provided also, that nothing herein shall extend to prevent the keeping open of any druggist shop, tavern or lodging house, or the sale of bread, fresh meat, fresh fish, or milk on Sunday, such sale, however, not to take place in any town or village during the celebration of divine service therein; and that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, one day in each week shall be given to every prædial labourer: provided, that nothing hereinbefore enacted, shall extend to any domestic work or labour which may be performed by any apprenticed labourers usually employed as domestics or watchmen by day or night, or mariners, nor to any labour performed by any apprenticed labourer in the tending or care of live stock, who shall continue to perform, for the usual periods, and at the usual hours, the duties respectively assigned to them; and except as aforesaid, no apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or compellable to labour on Sundays, except in cases of urgent necessity; in which case it shall be lawful for the owner or other person in management of such property where such necessity shall occur, to require and compel the immediate and continued service of any or all the apprenticed labourers during such emergency: And provided also, that prædial labourers employed in such works of necessity, tending cattle, domestic services, and protecting property, if employed on their own day, shall have some other day in lieu thereof.

Proviso.

One day in each week to be given to prædial labourers.
Not to extend to domestic work, &c.

No apprentice to labour on Sunday, except in cases of necessity.

Land, fish and time to be allowed prædial labourers.

15. And whereas, prædial slaves in these Islands are supplied partly by food, and partly by the cultivation of grounds set apart for the growth of provisions; Be it therefore enacted, that during the continuance of such apprenticeship as aforesaid, the person for the time being entitled to the services of every prædial apprenticed labourer shall allow to each and every such prædial apprenticed labourer a sufficient portion of land adapted to the growth of provisions, and at the rate of two pounds of salted fish in each and every week, for his support and maintenance, or some other equivalent, to the satisfaction of the prædial apprenticed labourer; and shall allow to each and every such prædial apprenticed labourer eleven days, to be deducted out of the 45 working hours in each week, over and above the one day allowed in each week and Sundays, in every year, at the discretion of such employer of the said prædial apprenticed labourers or their agent, and as by them may be deemed most advantageous and beneficial to such prædial apprenticed labourers.

Regulations respecting provision grounds.

16. And whereas it is necessary that proper regulations should be made and established, as to the extent of such provision grounds hereinbefore mentioned, and as to the distance at which which such grounds may be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourer; Be it enacted, that for the purposes of this Act, all grounds hitherto allotted to every slave during such his state of slavery for his maintenance and support shall, during the term of his apprenticeship, in quantity, quality and locality, be deemed adequate and proper for the maintenance and support of every prædial apprenticed labourer, unless good and sufficient cause be shown to the contrary: provided, and be it enacted, that such prædial or non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall satisfy, in case of complaint, such special justice that he has kept his ground in a due and proper state of cultivation.

Penalty on labourers neglecting their houses and provision grounds.

17. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, by wilful neglect or indolence during his own time, suffer his house or provision ground to fall into decay and bad order, it shall and may be lawful for the employer of such apprenticed labourer, with the sanction in writing of any special justice, to be obtained upon proof before him of such neglect or indolence, to put the house or provision ground of such apprenticed labourer into proper order for his comfort and support, and to deduct an equivalent quantity of labour from his own time, not exceeding 15 hours in any one week.

Provision to be made for labourers in cases where their grounds cannot support them.

18. And whereas, in certain parts of these Islands, there may not be lands proper for the cultivation of provisions, or by reason of long continuance of dry weather, or other casualty, the grounds hitherto appropriated for negro grounds may be rendered unproductive; Be it enacted, that in such case the master, owner or other person entitled to the service of such apprenticed labourer shall, by some other ways and means, make good and ample provision for all such apprenticed labourers to whose services they shall be entitled, in order that they may be properly supported and maintained, under a penalty not exceeding 40*s.* for each offence: provided always, that in such case, no diminution of the 45 hours, as hereinbefore mentioned, shall take place.

Clothing.

19. And be it further enacted, That it is and shall be the duty of every employer, or his agent, of apprenticed labourers, and he is hereby required, once in every year to deliver for the use of the labourers, clothing of the following description:—Six yards of oznaburgs, six yards of pennistons, or three yards six-fourths wide cloth for every labourer above 12 years of age, and half the quantity for every labourer under that age, and to each labourer one hat or cap: provided always, that employers may substitute other articles of clothing in lieu of those named, but which shall be in value equal to those mentioned in this clause.

Medical practitioner to be employed.

20. And be it further enacted, that every employer of apprenticed labourers shall employ some person duly qualified in the practice of physic and surgery, to attend them as occasion shall require, provided such medical practitioner can be procured; and that when any labourer shall be sick, or unable from any accident or cause whatsoever to perform his usual labour, the employer or his agent shall cause such labourer to be visited by the said medical practitioner, and shall provide such medicines, food and other necessaries as shall be deemed requisite by him; and the said practitioner, as has heretofore been customary, shall keep a book upon each estate, wherein the names of the patients, diseases, and his prescriptions shall be inserted.

Slavery utterly and for ever abolished after the 1st day of August 1834.

21. And be it further enacted, that subject to the obligations imposed by this Act upon such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, all and every the persons who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be holden in slavery within these Islands, shall upon, and from and after the said 1st day of August 1834 become, and be, to all intents and purposes, free and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted; and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, shall, in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, slavery shall be, and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished and declared unlawful throughout these Islands.

Apprenticed labourers entitled to the privileges of free persons.

22. And be it further enacted, that all persons who shall become apprenticed labourers on the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be, and are hereby declared to be entitled to all the rights and privileges of free persons, except as the same may be restricted by this or any other Act: provided always, that no person who shall become an apprenticed labourer by virtue of such Act, shall have or exercise any political franchise whatsoever by virtue of any property which he may acquire; nor be capable of serving as a juror, or of holding any office except as a constable or beadle; nor shall he be eligible to serve in the militia, unless in cases of great emergency, to be judged of by the Governor and a Council of War, when he shall be compelled to serve with the same liabilities as all other persons.

Exceptions.

Not to be arrested or imprisoned for debt.

23. And be it further enacted, that such apprenticed labourers shall not, during the continuance of such their apprenticeship, be liable to be arrested or imprisoned for debt.

Offenders under the Slave Act may be proceeded against.

24. And be it further enacted, that all offenders triable under the Act commonly called the Slave Act, and who shall not have been brought to trial before the 1st day of August next, shall and may be proceeded against and punished as the said Act provides, and as if this Act had not been passed.

Children under six years of age on 1st August 1834, and those born after that day, how provided for.

25. And whereas it may happen that children who have not attained the age of six years on the said 1st day of August 1834, or that children who after that day may be born to any female apprenticed labourers, may not be properly supported by their parents, and that no other person may be disposed voluntarily to undertake the support of such children; Be it therefore enacted, that if any child, who on the said 1st day of August 1834, had not not completed his sixth year; or if any child, to which any female apprenticed labourer may give birth on or after the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be brought before a special justice, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of such justice, that the parent of any such child is incapable of providing it with an adequate maintenance, and that such child has not completed his age of 12 years, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required, on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother; but in case it shall be made to appear to any such justice that such person aforesaid is unable or unfit to enter into such indenture, and properly to perform the covenants thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required, to bind any such child to any other person to be by him for that purpose approved, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and the term of such apprenticeship of any such child shall, by such indenture, be limited and made to continue in force until such child shall have completed his twenty-first year, and no longer; and every child so apprenticed as aforesaid by the order of any such justice of the peace aforesaid, shall, during his apprenticeship, be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work or labour to be by him done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be to him furnished, as any other such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid.

Parents to make provision for their children.

26. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer, being of good health and able to work, and being the father of a child under twelve years of age, shall not make adequate provision for the subsistence of such child, the special justice shall, on due proof, adjudge such labourer to be punished by hard labour, or by hiring him out during his own extra hours, and shall direct his earnings to be applied to the support of such child; and in case any child, so unprovided for as aforesaid, shall have no father living, then the mother, if competent by her labour, shall be compelled to provide for the subsistence of such child, and in default shall be sentenced to hard labour for any term not exceeding 20 days.

Indentures of apprenticeship of children.

27. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all indentures of apprenticeship of children required by this Act shall be, as nearly as the nature of the case will admit, in conformity with, and upon the same terms and conditions as indentures of apprenticeship of children made in England.

Special Justices.

28. And for ensuring the effectual superintendence of the said apprenticed labourers, and the execution of this Act; Be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty to issue, or to authorize the Governor, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to issue, under the public seal of these Islands, special commissions to one or more person or persons, constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of these Islands, or for any district within the same, for the special purpose of giving effect to this present Act, and to any laws which may hereafter be made for giving more complete effect to the same; and every person to, or in favour of whom any such commission may be issued, shall, by force and virtue thereof, and without any other qualification, be entitled and competent to act as a justice of the peace within the limits prescribed by such his commission, for such special purposes as aforesaid, but for no other purposes: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall prevent, or be construed to prevent, any person commissioned as a justice of the peace for such special purpose as aforesaid, from being included in the general commission of the peace for these Islands, in case it shall seem fit to the Governor to address both such special commission and such general commission as aforesaid, in any case to the same person or persons.

Special Justices to have sole jurisdiction over all matters between employer and apprentice.

29. And be it further enacted, that the several justices of the peace having special commissions as aforesaid (and no other magistrate or justice of the peace in these Islands), shall have, exercise and enjoy a sole and exclusive jurisdiction over, and shall solely and exclusively take cognizance of all offences committed, or alleged to have been committed, by any such apprenticed labourer, or by his employer, in such their relation to each other, or of the breach, violation or neglect of any of the obligations owed by them to each other, or of any question, matter or thing incident to or arising out of the relations subsisting between such apprenticed labourers and the persons respectively entitled to their services; provided that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the superior courts of civil and criminal justice in these Islands.

Special Justices alone to punish apprentices.

30. And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any person entitled to the services of any such apprenticed labourer, or any other person other than such justices of the peace holding such special commissions as aforesaid, to punish any such apprenticed labourer for any offence by him committed, or alleged to have been committed, by the whipping, beating or imprisonment of his person, or by any other personal or other correction or punishment whatever, or by any addition to the hour of labour hereinbefore limited; nor shall any court, judge or justice of the peace punish any such apprenticed labourer, being a female, for any offence by her committed, by whipping or beating her person: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall extend to exempt any apprenticed labourer from the operation of any law or police regulation, for the prevention or punishment of any offence which is or shall hereafter be in force in these Islands, in respect to all other persons of free condition.

No female apprentice to be whipped or beaten.

Proviso.

Special Justices to appoint constables on each plantation.

31. And be it enacted, that on every plantation the special justices shall appoint one or more of the apprenticed labourers thereon, with the consent of the master or manager, to be constables, constables, who shall be empowered to maintain peace and order on such plantation, under the directions of the proprietor or manager thereof, and to secure and place in confinement any apprenticed labourer who shall commit any offence on such plantation, or any apprenticed labourer not employed on such plantation, who may be found loitering thereon without the knowledge or permission of the proprietor or manager thereof; such apprentice confined as aforesaid, not to be kept in custody longer than shall be necessary to procure the attendance of the special justice: provided always, that if the attendance of a special justice cannot be procured within 24 hours, it shall and may be lawful for the proprietor or manager aforesaid, to order the release of such apprentice so confined as aforesaid, after the expiration of 24 hours: provided nevertheless, that in the event of such apprentice being discharged as aforesaid, the proprietor or manager shall and he is hereby required to prefer the complaint, on which such apprentice was confined, before the special justice, when he shall next come upon the estate; and provided that nothing shall be construed to give to any such constable any power or authority over any of His Majesty's subjects, except such apprenticed labourers.

Their duty.

32. And be it further enacted, that any such special justice may, if he pass sentence of imprisonment or confinement upon any apprenticed labourer, if he shall see fit, direct that such confinement or imprisonment shall take place upon the plantation to which such apprentice shall belong, or be then working upon.

Apprentices may be confined on the estates to which they belong.

33. And be it further enacted, that the person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer working upon or attached to or living at any plantation or settlement upon which there shall be less than 40 apprenticed labourers, shall be at liberty to carry any offending apprentice before any special justice, at the plantation or settlement at which such special justice shall sit, nearest to the place where the offence shall have been committed, or to any place within the district where such special justice shall sit.

Offending apprentices on small properties may be carried before a Special Justice.

34. And whereas it is necessary that proper regulations should be provided for the maintenance of order and good discipline among the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer, and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he may voluntarily enter for any hired service during the time in which he may not be bound to labour for his employer, and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers, and for the prevention and punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer, and for the suppression and punishment of any riot, or combined resistance of the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourers, and for preventing the escape from these Islands of any such apprenticed labourers during their term of apprenticeship; Be it therefore enacted, that all such offences shall be tried in a summary manner before any justice appointed by special commission.

Offences which may be tried in a summary manner.

35. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall resort to a special justice to complain against his employer, and that such complaint shall be adjudged frivolous or groundless, it shall be lawful for such special justice to punish such complaining parties, by adjudging them to repay double the extent of time which may have been lost to his employer, not exceeding fifteen hours in any one week, or such other punishment by stripes not exceeding twenty.

Groundless complaints punished.

36. And be it further enacted, that for every hour in which any labourer shall absent himself from the service of his employer without reasonable cause, to be decided by the special justice, he shall be compelled to serve two extra hours: provided, that such extra hours shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week.

Apprentice absenting himself for one hour punished.

37. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself for more than six hours in any one week without a reasonable cause, to be decided on by the special justice, he shall be adjudged a deserter; if for two days during one week in like manner, he shall be adjudged a vagaboud; if for five days in any one week in like manner, he shall be adjudged a runaway: those adjudged deserters shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; those adjudged vagabonds to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 15; and those adjudged runaways to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 30.

Apprentice absenting himself for more than six hours, &c. in one week, deemed deserter, &c.

Punishments.

38. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall during his apprenticeship wilfully absent himself from the service of his employer for a period exceeding three months at any one time, may be sentenced by any special justice either to serve his employer after the expiration of his apprenticeship for so long a time as he shall have so absented himself from such service, or to make satisfaction to his employer for the loss sustained by such absence (except so far as he shall have made satisfaction for such absence, either out of such extra hours as aforesaid or otherwise); provided, that such extra service or compensation shall not be compellable after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such apprentice.

Apprentice absenting himself for more than three months.

Punishment.

39. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be found wandering beyond the limits of the plantation of his employer without a written permission from such employer, employer, and who shall not be able to give a satisfactory account of himself, shall be liable to be apprehended, and upon conviction before any special justice aforesaid, shall be adjudged a vagabond and sentenced accordingly: provided, that nothing in this clause contained shall be applied to apprenticed labourers on their way to or from any place of divine worship on Sundays, or to or from market, or at such market or place: provided, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or construed to abridge or in any wise interfere with the full and free use and enjoyment by such apprentices of the time allotted to them as their own under and by virtue of the provisions of this Act.

Apprentice found wandering may be apprehended.

Apprentice harbouring deserter, &c. punished.

40. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall harbour or conceal a deserter, vagabond or runaway apprenticed labourer, he shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by additional labour, confinement or labour on the tread-mill for any number of days not exceeding 20, at the discretion of the special justice.

Apprentice performing his work indolently, &c. punished.

41. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted before the special justice of performing his work indolently, carelessly or negligently, shall for the first offence be adjudged to labour in the service of his employer for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week; for the second offence to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; for the third or any subsequent offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, with whipping not exceeding 20 stripes.

Careless use of fire, injury to property, &c. by apprentices punished.

42. And be it further enacted, that any labourer who, by the careless use of fire, shall wilfully endanger the property of his employer or any other person, or who shall wantonly injure the property of his employer or any other person, or who shall ill-use the cattle or other live stock of his employer or any other person, or who shall, by wilful negligence, expose the property of his employer or any other person to any damage or injury, or who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his employer, shall for every such offence, be adjudged, in the discretion of the justice, either to extra labour in the service of his employer for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30, or to any two or more such punishments: provided, that this enactment shall not exempt any such labourer from his liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him done or committed; but no such labourer shall be liable to be sued or prosecuted both under this Act, and under any such general laws as aforesaid.

Not to exempt apprentice from liability to actions, &c.

Illegal combinations among apprentices punished.

43. And be it further enacted, that any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employers, or who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to such lawful commands, shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be adjudged to confinement to hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, with whipping not exceeding 39 stripes.

Apprentices found drunk or fighting, or insolent, punished.

44. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself in an insolent or insubordinate manner towards his employer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his labour, shall, for every such offence be liable on conviction to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding one week, and whipping not exceeding 15 stripes.

No employer to inflict corporal punishment on apprentices, and no female apprentice to be whipped.

45. And be it further enacted, that all the offences specified in the three preceding clauses shall be inquired of by one of the justices having a special commission, unless he shall see cause to refer any case for trial to the court of grand sessions of the peace; and no employer shall be authorized to inflict any corporal punishment on any male apprenticed labourer, nor shall any woman be subject to be punished by whipping for any offence by her committed; but in all cases in which that punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying to the case of males only, and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any such male offender shall, when committed by women for minor offences, be punished by confinement in the stocks, or solitary confinement for any period not exceeding 10 days, and for heinous offences not otherwise provided for, by hard labour on the tread-mill not exceeding 30 days, or such other punishment as shall be awarded by the special justice.

Inferior misdemeanors and crimes of apprentices to be heard and determined by special justice.

46. And be it further enacted, that all other inferior misdemeanors and other crimes committed by apprenticed labourers against each other, or against the person entitled to their services, or against any other person, and not hereinbefore specified, shall be heard and determined before any justice appointed by special commission, reasonable notice of the time and place of such trial being given to the person entitled to the services of the apprentice complained against, where such person so entitled to his services is not the complainant; and such justice upon conviction of such apprentice shall order and direct such punishment to be inflicted as he shall think proper, not exceeding 50 lashes, nor three months' imprisonment to hard labour or 10 days' solitary confinement: provided, that nothing in this clause contained shall be taken to authorize such magistrate to sentence any female apprentice above the age of twelve years to be flogged or beaten: and provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to deprive any of His Majesty's subjects of their right to proceed against any such apprentice in any of the superior courts of this Island, for remedy against any apprentice for any wrong or injury done or committed to or against the person or property of such subject: and provided also, that when any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted of indolence or neglect, or improper performance of work, the special justice before whom such conviction viction shall take place, may if he sees fit, sentence the offender either alone or in addition to the punishment by flogging or hard labour hereinbefore directed, to labour for such number of hours or days in his own time for the benefit of the person entitled to his services, as the justice of the case may seem to require, not exceeding 15 hours in any one week.

Females above the age of 12 years not to be flogged or beaten.

Special Justice may award additional punishment of labour.

47. And be it further enacted, that every employer of apprenticed labourers on estates shall intimate to such labourers the commencement and the close of the hours of labour; for which purpose a signal shall be given in such manner as shall, in reference to each estate, have been previously approved of by the special justice of the district; which signal shall always be of such a nature as shall be distinctly visible or audible to the several labourers in the service of such person.

Commencement and close of labour to be intimated by signal.

48. And be it further enacted, that every contract between the employer and the apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any specific work as a task and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall only be entered into with the free assent of the latter to the same, and shall not continue in force for more than one year from the date thereof; and if such contract extends beyond the period of fourteen days, it shall be reduced into writing by the employer, and entered in a book to be kept for that purpose on the estate, wherein shall be specified the nature and amount of the extra labour and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of payment thereof shall be distinctly expressed; which book it shall be the duty of the special justice to inspect as often as he may visit the estate in the execution of his duties: provided always, that every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of twelve years and upwards, notwithstanding his infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid.

Contracts between employer and labourer for task work and other labour.

49. And be it further enacted, that no such contract as last aforesaid shall endure or continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of fourteen days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties with the approbation of such special justice, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him before the expiration of such fourteen days; and every such approbation of any such contract shall be attested by such special justice, under his hand, in the book so to be kept as aforesaid: provided always, that the said special justice, before his approbation of any such contract, shall ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same, and that they have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust.

Contracts between employer and labourer to be approved of by special justice.

50. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer violating the terms of such contract as aforesaid for task work or for extra service, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are hereinbefore provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him performed in the discharge of the services owing by him by law to such his employer.

Apprentice violating terms of contract punished.

51. And be it further enacted, that all complaints made by any apprenticed labourer against the person entitled to his services, touching any fraud practised, or refusal to furnish any such apprenticed labourer with sufficiency of provision ground, or of other means of maintenance and support, in cases where such apprentice hath no provision ground, or of illegally and improperly withholding from such apprentice any portion of the time allowed him to cultivate such ground, or of imposing task work on any apprenticed labourer contrary to the provisions of this Act, or of breach of any contract on the part of any person engaging the voluntary services of any apprenticed labourer, or of any cruelty, injustice or other wrong or injury done to or inflicted upon any apprenticed labourer by the person entitled to his services, shall be heard, adjudged and determined before any one or more special justice or justices; and he or they is and are hereby empowered to punish any offender in any of these respects last mentioned with a fine not exceeding 5 l.; and for default of goods and chattels whereon to levy such fine, the offender shall be committed to gaol until he shall pay or satisfy the same, but such imprisonment shall not exceed five days: provided that nothing herein mentioned shall be deemed or taken to bar or destroy the right of any apprenticed labourer to proceed in the superior courts for any wrong or injury done to or committed against his property or person by any person whomsoever.

Complaints of apprentices to be heard and determined by special justices.

52. And be it further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace who shall be present at the same, shall proclaim, or cause a flag or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited as a warning to all persons there present to separate and disperse quietly; and all persons who at the expiration of ten minutes from such proclamation, or exhibition of such flag or signal, shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall, on conviction, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding twelve months.

Riotous assemblages of apprentices punished.

53. And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer to keep, use or have in his possession any gunpowder, gun, swords, pistols or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapons, unless with the knowledge and consent of his master or manager.

Apprentices not to keep gunpowder or fire-arms.

54. And be it further enacted, that every apprentice so offending shall, on conviction before any special justice, be punished with whipping, imprisonment, hard labour in the penal gang or or house of correction of the district, or any two or more of those punishments, as may be awarded by such special justice: provided that such whipping shall not exceed 39 lashes, and such imprisonment shall not exceed one month.

Employer may seize fire-arms, &c.

55. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any such master, manager or lawful employer to seize and retain to his own use any gunpowder, guns, swords, pistols or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapon unlawfully in the possession of any apprenticed labourer.

Unlawful meetings of apprentices deemed felony.

56. And whereas it is necessary to prevent secret and unlawful meetings of apprenticed labourers; Be it further enacted, that all such labourers who shall be found at any meeting, formed either for the purpose of administering unlawful oaths or entering into unlawful compacts, or of learning the use of arms, or opposing or resisting any persons employed to apprehend them, or for any other unlawful purpose, such labourers shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of felony, and shall suffer transportation for life, or such other punishment as the court shall direct; and if any other person shall be present at any such meeting, and aiding and assisting in any of the unlawful purposes hereinbefore mentioned, such person shall, upon conviction thereof in the court of grand sessions of the peace, be punished by transportation for life, or fine, or imprisonment with hard labour, or both, as the court shall direct; and if any person, having any knowledge of such unlawful meetings as aforesaid shall not forthwith give information thereof to a justice of the peace, such person shall, on conviction before the court of grand sessions of the peace, suffer such punishment by fine, or imprisonment with hard labour, or both, as the court shall direct.

Labourer not to reside beyond limits of estate on which he resided on 1st August 1834, and not to quit the colony.

57. And be it further enacted, that no labourer shall reside beyond the limits of the estate on which he may be resident, on the 1st day of August 1834, without the consent in writing of his employer; and if any labourer shall quit or attempt to quit the colony without a passport from the Governor, which shall not be granted without the written consent of his employer, he shall, on conviction, be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months; and any person removing or assisting to remove any labourer as aforesaid, shall, on conviction, be liable to a penalty not exceeding 100*l.* currency, or to imprisonment for any time not exceeding 12 months; such fine to be paid to the person entitled to the services of the labourer so removed.

Apprentices forming unlawful establishments punished.

58. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourers who shall or may establish themselves without lawful authority in any part of the colony as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed on them by law, shall, on conviction before a special justice, be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months; and, if a male, to whipping, by any number of stripes not exceeding 39; and the said justice shall cause such community to be dislodged, and their habitations to be taken down and removed, if necessary.

Labourers taking unlawful possession of land to be dispossessed.

59. And be it further enacted, that if any labourer shall, without lawful authority, enter into the possession of any land belonging to His Majesty or to any other person, it shall be the duty of the special justice to dispossess such labourer from such land, and from any buildings erected thereon, and to cause the same, with all the crops growing thereon, to be delivered up to the owner of the land, or in case the owner shall not within one month after such seizure appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the said justice shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon, to be sold, and the proceeds of such sales to be paid to the treasurer for the public use; and if such possession was fraudulently taken, or with full knowledge that the party had no claim thereto, such labourer shall be sentenced by the said justice to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding three months; provided always, that where a labourer shall have been two years in undisturbed possession of any such land, the summary process aforesaid shall not be taken without one month's notice being previously given to the occupant.

Fishermen and mariners to be registered.

60. And be it further enacted, that all apprenticed labourers, whose ordinary occupation is on the sea as fishermen or mariners, shall be registered as such at the office of the special justice by their employer; and any apprenticed labourer engaging in such occupation unknown to his employer, shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months.

Vessels and boats to be numbered and registered.

61. And be it further enacted, that all vessels and boats, not registered under the Navigation Acts, shall be numbered and registered at the office of the special justice, and the number shall be conspicuously painted on the outside of each bow thereof; and the said justice shall be authorized and required to grant a license to keep such vessel or boat, together with her description, the name of the owner, and the place at which the same is usually moored or hauled up; and all unlicensed vessels or boats shall be liable to seizure and condemnation by the special justice; and all vessels and boats, moored or hauled up at any place not mentioned in the license, shall be liable to detention by the special justice, until the owner thereof shall have paid a fine of not less than 40*s.*, nor more than 10*l.* currency, and in default of payment within 24 hours, the same shall be sold by order of the special justice.

No person to purchase sugar, cotton, &c. from apprentices.

62. And be it further enacted, that if any person whomsoever shall buy, barter, or truck for, or receive by any means, of or from any apprenticed labourer, sugar, cotton, rum, molasses, cocoa, coffee, charcoal, firewood or other goods or merchandize of any sort, fish, poultry, goats, hogs, grass, fruit and vegetables of any sort excepted, without the knowledge or consent of the employer of such labourer, signified by a note in writing specifying the nature and and quantity of the goods, upon complaint made to any justice of the peace, the person so offending shall be bound over to appear at the next sessions of the peace to be held for these Islands; and, upon conviction thereof, such person shall be fined in a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, or double the value of the goods so clandestinely bought.

Apprentices fined may, upon non-payment, be sentenced to hard labour on tread-mill.

63. And be it further enacted, that in all cases where an apprenticed labourer shall have been convicted of an offence punishable by fine under this or any other Act, if he shall be unwilling or unable to pay such fine, it shall be lawful for the court or special justice to sentence such labourer to hard labour, in the proportion of one day for every 5*s.* of fine imposed; and in all cases in this Act where hard labour is mentioned, it shall be deemed to be hard labour on the tread-mill in the manner prescribed by the Act for the regulation thereof, or in repairing the public works or highways, or otherwise.

Warrants of justices of the peace to be duly executed.

64. And be it further enacted, that all warrants from any justice of the peace, directed to any constable or to the Provost Marshal General, or his lawful deputy, to make levies, or for any other matter whatsoever, shall be duly executed by such constable, the Provost Marshal General, or his lawful deputy, under a penalty not exceeding 50*l.* current money, to be levied by warrant of any justice whose former warrant he shall neglect or refuse to execute; and if the Provost Marshal General, or his lawful deputy, shall neglect or refuse to perform or execute any of the duties prescribed unto him by this Act, and for which no penalty s declared, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of 50*l.* current money for every neglect or refusal, to be levied as aforesaid; and whenever any warrant shall be granted against any apprenticed labourer who cannot be taken, and it should be proved that the employer, attorney or manager of such apprenticed labourer wilfully detained or concealed the said labourer, he shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 100*l.*

Penalty on employer concealing apprentice.

Penalty on Justices of the peace refusing to act.

65. And be it further enacted, that if any special or other justice of the peace shall refuse or neglect, upon application made to him, immediately to take proper measures to apprehend and bring to trial any apprenticed labourer whatsoever, for felony or any offence of an inferior nature charged on any such labourer, such justice shall forfeit 50*l.* current money, to be recovered in any court of record within these Islands, one moiety whereof shall be paid to the prosecutor or informer, and the other moiety to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, for the public uses of these Islands.

Fines and forfeitures.

66. And be it further enacted, that all fines and forfeitures laid by this Act shall be deemed and taken to be current money; and where no particular method of recovery of the forfeitures mentioned in this Act is directed, and the same do not amount to more than 5*l.* current money, the same shall be recovered before any special justice of the peace by warrant of distress and sale of the offender's goods and chattels, to be applied to the use of the public of these Islands.

Protection of persons acting under this Act.

67. And for the protection of persons acting in the execution of this Act; Be it further enacted, that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for any thing done in pursuance of this Act, shall be commenced within 10 calendar months after the act committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action, and the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month, at least, before the commencement of the action; and in any such action the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon: and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought, by or on behalf of the defendant; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit or discontinue any such action after issue joined, or if upon demurrer or otherwise, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover his full costs as between attorney and client, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant hath by law in other cases.

Interpretation of words used.

68. And be it further enacted, that in all cases where words in this Act importing the singular number or the masculine gender only are used, yet the Act shall be understood to include several matters as well as one matter, and several persons as one person, and females as well as males; and the word person shall be construed as applicable to every description of persons whatsoever, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

AN ACT to provide for the general Registration of all Slaves belonging to or settled in these Islands.—(Passed 19th May 1834.)

No. 44.

WHEREAS by an Act recently passed the British Parliament, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it has become necessary that a general registry of the slaves within these Islands should be made for the purpose of ascertaining the exact number of slaves belonging to or settled in these Islands; Be it therefore enacted, by the Lieutenant Governor, Council and and Assembly of the Island of St. Vincent and its dependencies, that from and after the 1st day of August now next ensuing, the several Acts relative to the registry of slaves and all parts thereof shall be wholly repealed, save and except for the punishment of such offences or the recovery and levying of such fines as may have been committed or incurred during the present registry, the said Acts and every of them shall be considered and taken to be in force for the space of twelve calendar months from the said first day of August.

2. And be it further enacted, that the registrar of slaves shall provide at the public expense the necessary books for the registry and enrolment hereinafter directed, in which books shall be entered and registered the names, sexes, ages and occupations of all slaves belonging to or settled in these Islands.

3. And be it further enacted, that between the passing of this Act and the 1st day of June in the present year, every person who shall be possessed of any slaves within these Islands shall upon oath make and deliver to the registrar of slaves a list, in manner and form directed by the schedule hereto annexed, of all slaves owned or possessed by them, whether in their own right or in right of others, and of whom in particular by name, and which shall contain the names, sexes, ages and occupations of all such slaves.

4. And whereas it will be necessary to ascertain the exact increase and decrease which shall take place in the number of slaves between the said 1st day of June hereinbefore mentioned and the 1st day of August next; Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that on or before the 1st day of August next, a return upon oath shall be made to the registrar of all increase or decrease of slaves which shall have taken place between the said 1st day of June and the 1st day of August, specifying the particular cause of increase or decrease, whether by birth, gift, inheritance, purchase, sale, death or otherwise.

5. And be it further enacted, that in case any person or persons whatsoever shall wilfully neglect to give in to the said registrar a list or lists, schedule or schedules of his her or their slave or slaves as directed by this Act, every such person or persons so neglecting shall be liable to all such pains, penalties and forfeitures as are imposed by the Acts of these Islands for the registration of slaves upon any person or persons wilfully guilty of such neglect.

6. And be it further enacted, that in case any person or persons whatsoever shall wilfully insert or cause to be inserted in the list or lists, schedule or schedules of his her or their slave or slaves, so by them given in as directed by this Act to the said registrar the name or names of any slave or slaves who shall not actually and bonâ fide belong to or be in the possession of the person making such return at the time of making such returns, every person or persons so offending shall upon conviction thereof forfeit and pay for each and every name so falsely inserted as abovesaid, the sum of 100 l. current money of this Island, one moiety thereof to be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to be paid into the public treasury of this Island.

7. And be it further enacted, that the registrar shall do and perform all such acts and things in and about this general registration appointed to be taken by this Act as are required by the several Slave Registry Acts of these Islands to be done and performed at any previous registry or return of slaves; and if the registrar shall omit or neglect to perform any of the duties required of him in and by the said registry Acts of these Islands, or either of them, or if he shall in any matter or thing relating to the general Registry established by this Act be guilty of any offence contrary to the provisions hereof, he shall for every omission, neglect or offence be subject and liable to and shall incur the like fines, forfeitures, pains and penalties as are imposed by the said Registry of Slave Acts, or either of them, for such and the like omission, neglect or offence.

8. And be it further enacted, that as soon as the said returns shall have been made, the registrar shall proceed to register and copy the same, with all convenient speed, in a distinct and legible hand in the books hereinbefore directed, to be kept by him precisely according to the returns given in.

9. And be it further enacted, that as soon as the registrar shall have entered and recorded in the said books the returns made to him, he shall subscribe his name and affix his seal of office thereto, and below his signature shall write the following affidavit, which shall be sworn to by him before the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor in manner following:

"Before A. B. [inserting the name and title of the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, as the case may be.]

"Personally appeared C. D., the registrar of slaves for the Island of St. Vincent and its dependencies, who being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists, makes oath and says, That he the said C. D. has twice carefully examined and compared all the preceding entries in this book [or this set of books] with all the different returns of slaves delivered to him, first by examining the said entries, while his clerk or assistant read the original returns respectively entered therein, and afterwards by examining the said returns, while his clerk or assistant read the said entries in the book [or set of books] respectively made therefrom; and that he is enabled thereby to depose and does depose that the preceding registry of slaves of the Island of St. Vincent and its dependencies is in all respects correctly and faithfully made."

Which

Which affidavit shall be authenticated under the hand of the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, and the great seal of these Islands, in manner following:

"I, E. F., [inserting his name and title of office] do hereby certify, That the above affidavit was duly sworn before me this —— day of —— 183—. Witness my hand and great seal of these Islands, this —— day of —— One thousand eight hundred and ——."

10. And be it further enacted, that as soon as the registrar shall have completed the registry and sworn to the same in the manner hereinbefore directed, all the books containing registry of slaves shall be by the said registrar deposited in the secretary's office of this Island, and a certificate by the secretary subscribed, certifying any copies or extracts from the same, shall be received in all courts and by all judges, magistrates and others in authority within these Islands as sufficient evidence of the authority of said copy, and a sufficient primâ facie evidence of the matters so certified, and shall be allowed for each certificate the sum of 3*s.* for every 96 words, a figure counting for a word.

The Return of A. B. of Slaves, his own property, or the property of others, [as the case may be.]

AN ACT for establishing a Police for the Regulation of Apprenticed Labourers, and for carrying into effect certain provisions of an Act, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in the Island of St. Vincent and its Dependencies, in consideration of Compensation, and for promoting the Industry and good conduct of the Manumitted Slaves."—(Passed 23d June 1834.)

Whereas by an Act recently passed the Imperial Parliament, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," exclusive cognizance of all matters incident to and arising out of the relation of the apprenticed labourers and their employers, is given to the magistrates to be appointed by virtue of the said Act, and it has become necessary to assign certain limits, and to make provision for the exercise of their jurisdiction, and for ensuring the effectual superintendence of apprenticed labourers; Be it therefore enacted by the Lieutenant Governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Vincent and its dependencies, that the Island of St. Vincent and its dependencies be divided into three divisions, to be denominated the first or Windward division, which shall include Charlotte parish; the second or Southern division, which shall include St. George's parish, the Grenadines and that part of St. Andrew's parish, called New Edinburgh; and the third or Leeward division, which shall include St. Patrick and St. David's parish, and that part of St. Andrew's not included in the second or southern division, and that each of the said divisions be subdivided into three judicial districts.

2. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the boundaries of the judicial districts shall be as follows; namely, in the first or windward division, the first judicial district to be denominated the George Town district, to include that part of Charlotte parish lying between the western boundary of the Fancy Estate and Byera River; the second judicial district to be denominated Colonarie Bay district, to include that part of Charlotte parish lying between Byera River and the northern boundary of the Union estate; the third judicial district to be denominated Biabou district, to include that part of Charlotte parish, lying between the northern boundary of the Union estate and Yambou River, together with the northern portion of Marriaqua Valley; in the second or southern division, the first judicial district to be denominated the Calliaqua district, to include that part of St. George's parish lying between Yambou River and the western boundary of the Villa estate, together with the southern portion of Marriaqua Valley; the second judicial district to be denominated the Kingstown district, to include the remaining part of St. George's parish, and that part of St. Andrew's parish called New Edinburgh; the third judicial district to be denominated the Grenadine district, to include Bequia and such of the islands as lie to the northward of Carriacou; in the third or leeward division, the first judicial district to be denominated the Buccament district, to include that part of St Andrew's parish not included in the second division; the second judicial district to be denominated the Barrouallie district, to include St. Patrick's parish; and the third judicial district to be denominated the Chateaubeliar district, to include St. David's parish.

3. And be it further enacted, that the Governor of this Colony shall be empowered, with the advice and consent of His Majesty's Privy Council of these Islands, to make such alterations in the said limits and boundaries, as may be found by experience to be expedient to the public convenience and advantage, or necessary to carry the purposes and intentions of this Act more fully into effect.

4. And be it further enacted, that a stipendiary justice shall preside over each of the divisions, and shall actually reside within the limits thereof, except prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause to be allowed by the Governor.

5. And that for the purpose of more effectually maintaining the public peace, the Governor shall be empowered to appoint, in each of the said judicial districts, three or more special magistrates, with the same powers and authorities as are given to the stipendiary magistrates.

6. And be it further enacted, that such justices shall on the Saturday in each and every week, or oftener, if necessary, hold a petty session within their divisions and districts, for hearing and deciding upon such cases as may be brought before them; and the stipendiary justice shall once in each fortnight, or oftener if need be, repair to each estate within his division, then and there to take cognizance of such cases as may be brought before him.

7. And be it further enacted, that every stipendiary magistrate shall keep a journal of all cases brought before him, in which he shall enter—1st, the date of the complaint; 2d, the name of the complainant; 3d, the substance of the complaint; 4th, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; 5th, the substance of the evidence; 6th, his decision on the case; 7th, whether the decision had been carried into effect; 8th, any general remarks which he may think desirable.

8. And be it further enacted, that at the end of each quarter, the stipendiary magistrate shall transmit to the Governor a duplicate of his journal, for the preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereto annexed, to be sworn before any magistrate, to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which the deponent has been engaged as such stipendiary magistrate, during the quarter to which it refers.

9. And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the stipendiary and special justices, on receiving any complaint, to reduce it to writing, and to cause it to be read by, or to read it over to the complainant by whom it shall be then subscribed, when if the complaint shall appear to the justice immaterial and not to deserve further inquiry, he may dismiss the complaint; but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the complainant to make oath that the complaint is true.

10. And be it further enacted, that upon taking any complaint, to the truth of which such oath may have been made as aforesaid, the justice in all cases which impute to the party charged a capital or transportable offence, where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged will endeavour to escape, or when there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace, shall issue his warrant for the arrest and apprehension of the party charged, and in all other cases the justice shall proceed in the first instance by summons.

11. And be it further enacted, that in all cases in which it may be necessary to adduce witnesses in support of or in answer to any complaint, the stipendiary or special justice shall issue a summons to every such witness; and if any person summoned as aforesaid, shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or appearing, shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him by such justice, in relation to the matters depending before him, it shall be lawful for such justice to issue his warrant for the arrest and apprehension of such defaulter, or to commit to close custody, there to remain until he shall submit to be sworn and examined, and to make such answers as aforesaid.

12. And be it further enacted, that at the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any complaint, the justice shall in the presence of all parties, first read over the written complaint, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and proceed to examine on oath the party complaining and the witnesses; taking down in writing the deposition of each witness, which shall be read over by or to such witness, and signed by him.

13. And be it further enacted, that the justice may from time to time adjourn any such proceeding for further inquiry, and if necessary commit the party charged to custody, pending such adjournment, or take bail for his appearance; and at the close of the proceedings the justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, which shall be reduced into writing and subscribed with his hand.

14. And be it further enacted, that the justice shall either dismiss the complaint, and state in his written decision whether it was dismissed as being unproved, or as frivolous and vexatious or malicious; or sanction any compromise between the parties which he may think just, or convict the party charged, or commit him to prison to take his trial at the court of grand sessions of the peace for the imputed offence.

15. And be it further enacted, that any summons, warrant or order issued by any stipendiary or special justice within his own district, may without further authority be carried into execution in any part of these Islands.

16. And be it further enacted, that if any suit or action shall be commenced against any stipendiary or special justice, in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done, by virtue and and in pursuance thereof, the court shall give judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff shall by such judgment be condemned to pay treble costs of suit.

17. And for the protection of all persons acting in the execution of this Act; Be it enacted, that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for any thing done in pursuance of this Act, shall be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action and of the cause thereof shall be given to the defendant, one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action; and in any such action the defendant may plead the general issue and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action, if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought, by or on behalf of the defendant; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit or discontinue any such action after issue joined, or if upon demurrer or otherwise judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover his full costs as between attorney and client, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant hath by law in other cases.

18. And be it further enacted, that in each of the divisions into which these Islands shall be divided, a police settlement shall be established, and be under the particular superintendence of the stipendiary justice who may for the purposes of this Act be appointed thereto; and that whenever an Act of the Lieutenant Governor, Council and Assembly shall be passed for the purpose, there shall be erected at each of such police settlements such buildings as may be deemed necessary.

19. And be it further enacted, that each police establishment shall consist of one serjeant and four policemen, all able-bodied men, between the ages of 20 and 50 years, to be appointed by the Governor, and liable to be removed by him for bad conduct or inefficiency.

20. And be it further enacted, that the serjeants and policemen so to be appointed shall be liable to be suspended from office by the stipendiary justice for the division, subject to the Governor's confirmation or disallowance of such suspension.

21. And be it further enacted, that the serjeants and policemen of each police settlement shall be annually provided with a uniform, and with such weapons and accoutrements as may be best adapted to the service.

22. And be it further enacted, that the policemen in each police settlement shall receive pay at the rate of 50 l., and the serjeants 100 l. currency per annum.

23. And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the serjeants and policemen to carry into execution such orders as they shall receive from any of His Majesty's justices of the peace, or any stipendiary or special magistrate, or special justice, for the prevention and repressing of crime and for enforcing obedience to the laws.

24. And be it further enacted, that the employer of the labourer sentenced to the treadmill shall pay to the keeper 9*d.* currency per day for feeding him; and no fees for commitment and release shall be allowed.

25. And be it further enacted, that at each police settlement shall also be established a penal gang, to be composed of such persons as may be sentenced to labour therein.

26. And be it further enacted, that as often as the stipendiary magistrate of the division shall so direct, the said penal gang shall, under the superintendence of the serjeant, or in his absence, of some other member of the police, be employed in any laborious work, either upon the public roads or works, or otherwise, as may be deemed expedient, either for the support of the prisoners at such settlement, or for the public advantage.

27. And be it further enacted, that each stipendiary justice shall once in each quarter make to the Governor a report of the effective strength and condition of the police force at each settlement, and of the state of the buildings, and also of the state and conduct of the prisoners therein confined.

28. And be it further enacted, that the stipendiary justice of each division shall from time to time establish all necessary rules for the internal discipline of the said police establishment, for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes, for their religious instruction, for the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety among them, and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules, which shall be first submitted to and approved of by the Governor; and within the meaning and for the purposes of this Act every person who for the time being shall be in the lawful administration of this government shall be taken to be the Governor thereof.

29. And be it further enacted, that in all cases where words in this Act importing the singular number or masculine gender only are used, yet the Act shall be understood to include several matters as well as one matter, and several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males; and the word "person" shall be construed as applicable to every description of persons whatsoever, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

30. And be it further enacted, that this Act shall commence and be in force on, from and after the 1st day of August 1834, and continue until the 1st day of August 1840.

AN ACT for carrying into effect the Provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies.—(Passed 8th March 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS an Act has recently passed the Imperial Parliament, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves:" And whereas by that Act the sum of 20,000,000 l. sterling is appropriated as a compensation for the holders of slaves whose property is thereby effected: And whereas in consideration thereof it is expedient that a Bill should pass the Legislature of this Island, for giving effect to the said Act for the Abolition of Slavery: And whereas in and by the first section of the said Act, of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, it is enacted, "That from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who in conformity with the laws now in force in the said Colonies respectively, shall, on or before the 1st day of August 1834, have been duly registered as slaves in any such Colony, and who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be actually within such Colony, and who shall by such registries appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834, of the full age of six years or upwards, shall by force and virtue of this (the now in part reciting Act) and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship or other deed or instrument for that purpose become and be apprenticed labourers, provided that for the purposes aforesaid every slave engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas shall be deemed and taken to be within the Colony to which such slave shall belong:" And whereas it is further provided and enacted in and by the said Act, that amongst other things therein contained, during the continuance of the apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer, such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer as would for the time being have been entitled to his or her services as a slave, if the said Act had not been made; and that a division of the said apprenticed labourers into three distinct classes should be made and effected as therein mentioned and hereinafter enacted; the first class to consist of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising such persons as are therein mentioned; the second class to consist of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising such persons as are therein also mentioned; and the third class to consist of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes, subject to the proviso therein mentioned, that no person of the age of 12 years or upwards should be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person should for 12 calendar months at the least, next before the passing of the said in part reciting Act, have been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce; and that no such prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1840, nor during such his or her said apprenticeship be liable to labour in his or her employer's service for more than forty-five hours in the whole in any one week, and no such non-prædial apprenticed labourer should continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1838, and that before the expiration of the apprenticeship of any apprenticed labourer, it shall be lawful for the person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer to discharge him or her therefrom, in such manner as therein provided for, and as hereinafter enacted: provided, nevertheless, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any such disease, or mental or bodily infirmity, as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom, and that any apprenticed labourer might purchase his or her discharge from such apprenticeship without the consent, or in opposition, if necessary, to his or her employer's will, in the manner therein provided for, and hereinafter enacted; and that no prædial apprenticed labourer, attached to the soil, should be liable to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer, except upon, or in or about the works and business of the plantations or estates, to or on which such prædial apprenticed labourers shall have been attached or worked, or usually employed on or previously to the said 1st day of August 1834, except with a written consent of two special justices of the peace, as thereinafter directed to be appointed, which consent shall be in such manner and form as therein is provided for, and hereinafter enacted; and that the right or interest of any employer to or in the services of any apprenticed labourers, shall be transferable in such manner and form as therein is mentioned and hereinafter is enacted, and that in cases in which the food therein directed to be allowed to any prædial apprenticed labourer shall be supplied, not by the delivery to him or her of provisions, but by the cultivation by such prædial apprenticed labourer, of ground set apart for the growth of provisions, the actual extent of such ground, and the distance thereof from the place of residence of the prædial apprenticed labourer, for whose use it may be so allotted, and the length of time to be deducted and allowed to him or her for the cultivation of the said ground, shall be regulated in manner therein provided for and hereinafter enacted: And whereas by the 14th section of the said in part recited Act, His Majesty, or the Governor of any Colony, by His Majesty's authority, may appoint justices of the peace by a special commission to give effect to the said in part recited Act, and to all Colonial Laws to be made in pursuance thereof: And whereas in and by the 16th section of the said in part recited Act, after reciting as therein mentioned, it is enacted and declared, that nothing in the said in part recited Act contained, extends or shall be construed to extend to prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies of any such Acts of General Assembly as may be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as are therein as aforesaid, or in any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into full and complete effect: provided nevertheless, that it shall not be lawful for any such Governor, Council and Assembly, by any such Acts of Assembly as aforesaid, to make or establish any enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order, which shall be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to the said reciting Act, or any part thereof, but that every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order, shall be and is thereby declared to be absolutely null and void and of no effect: And whereas it is in and by the 18th and 19th sections of the said in part recited Act provided and enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any such Governor, Council and Assembly, by any such Acts of General Assembly as aforesaid, to authorize any magistrate or justice of the peace, other than and except the justices of the peace holding such special commissions as aforesaid, to take cognizance of any offence committed or alleged to have been committed by any such apprenticed labourer, or by his or her employer, in such their relation to each other, or of the breach, violation or neglect of any of the obligations owed by them to each other, or of any question, matter or thing, incident to or arising out of the relations subsisting between such apprenticed labourers and the persons respectively entitled to their services; and every enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order, in any such Acts to the contrary contained, shall be, and is thereby declared to be null and void, and of no effect; and that the several justices of the peace having such special commissions as aforesaid, shall, within the respective colonies to which they shall be respectively appointed, have, exercise and enjoy a sole and exclusive jurisdiction over, and shall solely and exclusively take cognizance of all such offences or alleged offences as last aforesaid, and of every such breach, violation or neglect of any of the aforesaid obligations, and of every such question, matter or thing as aforesaid, any law, custom or usage in any of the said colonies to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding: provided, nevertheless, that nothing therein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the Supreme Courts of Record, or the Superior Courts of civil and criminal justice, in any of the said respective Colonies: And whereas it is desirable and expedient, that such of the provisions of the said in part recited Act, as relate to the internal concerns of this Island and its dependencies, and as far as the Legislature thereof has power and authority reserved to it under the said in part recited Act, to enact, should be forthwith enacted in the manner hereinafter mentioned, expressed and contained: And whereas it is necessary in furtherance of the said Act of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, and for the purposes of this Act, and for the effectually carrying into operation the several rules, regulations and provisions in the said Act of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, and hereinafter contained, that this Colony be divided into districts for the judicial cognizance by and peculiar jurisdiction of justices of the peace, appointed or to be appointed by special commission under the said Act of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, relative to the several offences, duties, matters and things hereinafter mentioned, expressed and enacted:

1. Be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency Major-General Sir Lionel Smith, knight, commander of the most honourable military Order of the Bath, Governor-General in and over the Islands of Barbadoes, Grenada, Saint Vincent and Tobago, and their several dependencies, the members of His Majesty's Council and the representatives of the people of the said Island of Grenada and its dependencies, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, for the purposes of this Act, this Colony shall be divided into six districts, and that within each district there shall be established a police, consisting of one special justice, one serjeant and ten privates, to be at the disposal of such special justice and under his orders; and the limits of such districts shall be settled and fixed by a proclamation or proclamations to be issued from time to time by the Governor; and that for the purposes of this Act such districts shall be under the judicial charge and especial jurisdiction of the respective special justices, to be from time to time appointed thereto.

2. And be it enacted, that the common gaol or cage of every parish, or united parishes of each district, shall be divided into such apartments or in such manner as that the male and female prisoners therein shall be kept apart; and in each cage or gaol there shall be established and fixed such stocks for the male prisoners, and such stocks for the female prisoners, and such cells for solitary confinement, and such machinery for labour as may be approved by the Governor.

3. And be it enacted, that in each district there shall be established and formed a culprit's gang, to be composed of all such apprenticed labourers as shall be by the special justice of the district condemned to imprisonment with hard labour.

4. And be it enacted, that when any apprenticed labourers shall be by the special justice of any district condemned to imprisonment with hard labour, it shall be either on the tread-mill, or under some mark of disgrace on the plantation to which such apprentice or apprentices may be attached, or in cleaning, widening, mending and repairing effectually the public streets, roads and highways within the district in which such culprit or culprits shall be condemned to labour, at the discretion of the special justice of such district.

5. And be it enacted, that the special justice of each district shall upon the application of any proprietor, agent, manager or other person having charge of any estate whereon there may be ten labourers employed, or on the application of any apprenticed labourer or labourers, repair to any such plantation, and shall investigate any complaint that may be then and there made to him, and shall decide and adjudge thereon according to law, or shall appoint some other time to investigate and decide such matter on such plantation.

6. And be it enacted, that the special justice of each district shall keep a journal and a duplicate journal of all the cases that shall be brought before him, either at his place of residence or at any plantation or estate, in which journals he shall first enter the date when the complaint was lodged with him; secondly, the name of the complainant and the name of the defendant; thirdly, the substance of the complaint; fourthly, the names of the witnesses adduced on both sides or on either side; fifthly, the substance of the evidence; sixthly, the special justice's decision upon the case; seventhly, whether and when the decision has been carried into effect; and eighthly, any remarks which he may think proper to insert therein.

7. And be it enacted, that the journal of each district shall be kept in one and the same uniform manner, to be prescribed by the Governor; for which purpose the Governor is hereby authorized to alter or vary the form in and by the last preceding clause of this Act defined, and to substitute such other form or plan as to him shall seem more advisable.

8. And be it enacted, that at the end of each quarter of a year the special justice of each district shall transmit to the Governor the duplicate journal for the then preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereto annexed, and which affidavit shall be to the effect that the journal has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the complaints, cases and proceedings which have been had and taken by and before him during the quarter to which it refers, and that the duplicate journal is a complete, accurate and perfect transcript of the original in his keeping.

9. And be it enacted, that until the Governor shall have actually received such duplicate journal so verified as aforesaid, the special justice, whose duty it shall be to transmit to him such duplicate journal so verified as aforesaid, shall not be entitled to receive or to draw any order for, and the Governor shall not be at liberty to pay or to issue any order for the payment of the salary of the said special justice, for the period of that quarter of which his duplicate journal shall not be so transmitted as aforesaid.

10. And be it enacted, that upon entering any such complaint in his journal, to the truth of which such oath shall have been made by the complainant, the special justice shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged or shall issue a summons for his attendance as the case may require, and as in the next succeeding section of this Act is specified; and every such warrant of arrest shall be in the form or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (A.), and every such summons shall be in the form or to the effect hereunto annexed marked (B.)

11. And be it enacted, that the warrant of arrest shall or may be issued in all cases which impute a felony to the party charged, and in all cases where there is reason or suspicion to apprehend that the party charged will endeavour to escape, and also in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay; in all other cases the special justice shall proceed in the first instance by summons to the party charged.

12. And

12. And be it enacted, that in all cases where the special justice shall proceed in the first instance by warrant of arrest, if there be not sufficient time after such arrest to investigate the cause of complaint upon the same day of such arrest, the special justice shall and may adjourn or postpone such investigation unto some other day, to be by him for that purpose fixed; and if he see fit may require bail of and from the party charged, to appear on such other day to answer the complaint; and in all offences bailable under this Act, if the party arrested cannot find bail for his appearance on the day assigned to answer the complaint, he shall be committed to safe keeping by the special justice under whose warrant he was arrested, and the hearing of the complaint and answer shall not be postponed beyond 24 hours after such commitment.

13. And be it enacted, that in all cases where the special justice shall proceed in the first instance by summons to the party charged, such summons shall and may be served either upon the party in person or by leaving the same at the usual residence or place of abode of such party, charged at least 48 hours before the time in and by such summons required for his attendance: provided always, that if the person or persons to be summoned shall be an apprentice or apprentices, the service of such summons shall be upon the person or persons in whose immediate employ such apprentice or apprentices shall be; and such employer shall produce or cause to be produced the apprentice so summoned, pursuant to such summons.

14. And be it enacted, that in all cases where it may be necessary or advisable to adduce witnesses in support of, or in answer to any such complaint, the special justice shall issue his summons to every such witness in the form or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (C.)

15. And be it enacted, that at the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, the special justice shall in the presence of all parties, first read aloud to the party charged the written complaint, and then take down in writing the plea or answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining, and the witnesses in support of and in answer to such complaint, and shall take down in writing the depositions, and which depositions, when taken down in writing, shall be read over to and shall be signed by the deponent.

16. And be it enacted, that the special justice before whom any such complaint shall be investigated, may from time to time, as occasion shall require, adjourn any such inquiry to some other day, or to some other time of the same day; and shall enter in his journal every such adjournment, and the cause thereof, and may, if necessary, commit the party charged in all cases which impute a felony to the party charged, and in all cases where there is reason or suspicion to apprehend that the party charged will endeavour to escape, and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay; in all other cases the special justice shall, if necessary, take bail for the appearance of the party charged; and every such commitment shall be in the form or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (D.); and every such recognizance of bail shall be in the form or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (E.)

17. And be it enacted, that when the proceedings upon any complaint shall be closed, the special justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, and shall reduce the same to writing, and subscribe it with his hand, and all such proceedings shall be entered in his journal forthwith, after such decision shall have been pronounced.

18. And be it enacted, that the special justice before whom such proceedings shall be taken shall, within 10 days after demand, and upon payment of a fee of 2*s.* currency, per folio of 90 words, deliver a true copy of his said proceedings, and of his decision thereon, to either or both of the parties demanding it, under a penalty of 50*l.* currency for neglecting or refusing so to do.

19. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for such special justice, by any decision to be by him made upon any such complaint, and as the justice or reason of the case may require, either to dismiss the complaint, or if not for a felony, to sanction any compromise between the parties which he may think fair or equitable, or to convict the party charged, or according to the nature of the offence, to commit the party charged to prison to take his trial for the imputed offence, or to take bail for his appearance to answer to a bill of indictment or information for the imputed offence; such commitment or bail to be regulated in the same manner and under such circumstances as are in and by the 16th section of this Act hereinbefore mentioned and specified.

20. And be it enacted, that if any such complaint be dismissed, the special justice shall, in such his written decision entered in his journal, state whether such dismissal was in consequence of the complaint not being sufficiently or satisfactorily proved, or frivolous, vexatious, malicious or negatived.

21. And be it enacted, that if any such complaint shall be so dismissed as frivolous, vexatious, malicious or negatived, the special justice may adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to work in the service of his employer for any time not exceeding in the whole 15 extra hours in any one week, or if the complainant be the employer, the special justice may adjudge such employer to the payment of a penalty, for the use of the apprenticed labourer charged, of not less than 10*s.*, nor more than 50*s.*, currency.

22. And be it enacted, that if any such complaint shall be so dismissed as being malicious, the said special justice may, at the instance of the party charged, adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to whipping, not exceeding 30 stripes, or imprisonment with hard labour, for any time not exceeding one month; or if the complainant be the employer of any such apprenticed labourer, to a fine not exceeding 4*l.* currency, for the benefit of the party charged.

23. And be it enacted, that if the special justice shall, by such his decision, convict the party charged, or shall convict the complainant of having preferred a frivolous and vexatious, or a malicious complaint, such conviction shall be severally drawn up and entered in the journal, according to some or one of the forms, or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (F.) (G.) (H.)

24. And be it enacted, that if the special justice shall commit the party charged to take his trial for the imputed offence, such commitment shall be drawn up in the form, or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (I.)

25. And be it enacted, that upon any conviction of the party charged, the special justice shall forthwith issue his warrant, under his hand and seal, for the execution of his decision or judgment, except where fines are imposed and payment tendered, which warrant shall be in the form or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (K.)

26. And be it enacted, that all summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders, so to be issued by any special justice as aforesaid, shall be directed to and executed by the police officers of his district: provided, nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for such special justice, as occasion may require, to direct any such summons, warrant, commitment, or other order, to any other peace officer or peace officers of the Colony, either jointly with or instead of such his officers of police, as to him may seem requisite; and such other peace officer or officers are hereby required to execute the same.

27. And be it enacted, that any summons, warrant or order, issued by such special justice within his own district, may, without any further authority, be carried into execution in any part of the Colony, though beyond such district.

28. And be it enacted, that if any person summoned by the special justice as a witness, shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or appearing, shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him by such special justice, in relation to the matters pending before him, it shall be lawful for such special justice to issue his warrant for the arrest of any such defaulter, and to commit him to close custody, there to remain until he submit to be sworn and examined, and to make such answers as aforesaid; and every such warrant of arrest or commitment shall be in the form or to the effect hereunto annexed, marked (L.) (M.): provided, however, that during the examination of a witness he shall not be compelled to answer any question which may criminate himself.

29. And be it enacted, that if any suit or action be commenced against any special justice in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done by virtue and in pursuance of this Act, he may plead the general issue, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence in any trial to be had thereupon, and if the plaintiff be nonsuited, or discontinue his action, without the consent of the defendant, or a verdict be found against the plaintiff, such plaintiff shall pay treble costs of suit.

30. And be it enacted, that if in any such action or suit against any special justice, he shall at any time before trial of such action or suit, tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury, in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred, and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept such amends and costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court at the trial of such suit, that such amends have been so tendered, and were sufficient, the court shall award that judgment be given for the plaintiff in the amount of the sum so tendered, subject, nevertheless, to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the defendant.

31. And be it enacted, that no suit or action shall be brought against any special justice in respect of any matter or thing by him done, under or in pursuance of this Act, unless the same shall be commenced within six calendar months after the cause of action accrued, nor unless one month's notice previous to the entry of such suit or action shall be duly served on such special justice.

32. And be it enacted, that no suit or action shall be brought against any policeman, constable, peace-officer or other officer, or against any person or persons acting by, under the order, or in the aid of such policeman, constable, peace-officer or other officer, for any thing done in obedience to any warrant under the hand or seal of any special justice, until demand hath been made or left at the usual place of the abode of such policeman, constable, peace-officer or other officer, by the party or parties intending to bring such action, or by his attorney or agent, in writing, signed by the party demanding the same, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and that the same hath been refused or neglected, for the space of six days after such demand; and in case after such demand, and compliance therewith, any action shall be brought against any such policeman, constable, peace-officer or other officer, or against any person or persons acting by their or either of their order, and in their or either of their aid as aforesaid, without making the special justice who signed or sealed the said warrant, a defendant to such suit or action, that on producing and proving such warrant at the trial of such action, the jury shall give their verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such special justice.

33. And

33. And be it enacted, that if such action be brought jointly against such special justice, and also against such policeman, constable, peace-officer or other officer, or against any person or persons acting by his order and in his aid as aforesaid, then on proof of such warrant, the jury shall find for such policeman, constable, peace-officer or other officer, or for such person or persons acting by his order and in his aid, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction as aforesaid; and if the verdict shall be given against the special justice, in such case the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover his her or their costs against him, to be taxed in such manner by the proper officer so as to include such costs as the plaintiff or plaintiffs are liable to pay to the defendant or defendants for whom such verdict shall be found.

34. And whereas it is necessary to distinguish in reference to each person about to become an apprenticed labourer, to which of the three classes of apprenticed labourers hereinbefore mentioned he or she belongs: And whereas by virtue of or under an Act of the Legislature of this Colony, intituled, "An Act for establishing a Registry of Negro and other Slaves, in the Island of Grenada and its Dependencies," and dated the 27th day of March 1833, a general registry of the slaves within this Colony is directed to take place between the 1st day of January and the 30th day of April 1834, when all and every person and persons resident in this Colony, then being in lawful possession of any slave or slaves within the same, whether as proprietor, mortgagee, trustee, sequestrator, receiver, lessee, attorney, agent, executor, administrator, guardian, committee, or in any other right or character, and whatever his her or their title or interest in any such slave or slaves may be, shall respectively make and deliver, or cause to be made and delivered, unto the registrar of slaves thereunder appointed, a schedule or return of all slaves by him her or them possessed, on the 31st day of December then immediately preceding, with a list of particulars, according to the form thereunto annexed, marked (A.), together with a duplicate thereof; and one of the said returns shall be numbered by the registrar, according to the order of progression in which such said returns shall have been given in, and the same shall be deposited in his office to be registered and recorded in the books thereof, and the duplicate of each and every such return and list as aforesaid shall be in like manner correspondently numbered, and being previously certified and signed by the registrar, shall be delivered back to the person or persons making the said return or returns: And whereas it will be necessary to ascertain what increase and decrease may take place among the slaves in each said schedule between the said 31st day of December last preceding the making of such return, and the 1st day of August 1834, when slavery is to cease; Be it therefore enacted, that between the 1st day of August 1834, and the 30th day of September in the same year, every person to whom the registrar shall have so delivered back the duplicate of each and every such return and list as aforesaid, shall fairly and correctly transcribe such return, only omitting the names and particulars of such of the persons therein named as shall since the original return was given in as aforesaid be then dead, manumitted or transferred, and shall affix to the entry of the name of each prædial attached apprenticed labourer in such transcript the letters P. A., and to the entry of the name of each prædial unattached apprenticed labourer in such transcript the letters P. U., and to the entry of the name of each non-prædial apprenticed labourer in such transcript the letters N. P.; provided that no apprenticed labourer above the age of twelve years shall be included in the class of prædial apprenticed labourers in such transcript, unless during the space of twelve calendar months before the date of the said statute of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, he or she had been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands belonging to his or her employer, being a prædial attached apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, or had been habitually employed in agriculture or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise upon lands not belonging to his or her employer, being a prædial unattached apprenticed labourer as aforesaid.

35. And be it enacted, that between the said 1st day of August and the said 30th day of September 1834, every such transcript, with such letters as aforesaid affixed to the entry of the names therein, of each person who shall have then become an apprenticed labourer shall be delivered by the person possessing the same to the registrar, together with a list of the names of the increase and decrease which shall have taken place of or among such respective persons between the 31st day of December preceding such original return as aforesaid and the said 1st day of August 1834.

36. And be it enacted, that to every such transcript, with such distinguishing letters as aforesaid affixed to the entry of the names of each apprenticed labourer therein, there shall be annexed at the time of the delivery thereof to the registrar as aforesaid an affidavit by the person delivering the same, to the effect that the distinctions therein made comprise only such persons who in their state of slavery had been habitually employed during twelve calendar months next preceding the date of the said statute of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, in agriculture or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise upon lands belonging to their owners or other persons, according as such prædial apprenticed labourers shall be attached or not attached to the soil.

37. And be it enacted, that if in any case the registrar shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of the transcript delivered to him, he is hereby authorized and required to appoint by notice a time and place at which the person so delivering to the registrar such transcript shall attend him, to substantiate the accuracy of such transcript so delivered.

38. And be it enacted, that at the time and place so to be appointed, the person to whom such notice of appointment shall be addressed or given, is hereby required to attend the registrar, and if required shall bring with him any apprenticed labourer respecting whom any any such doubt may have arisen, together with any other apprenticed labourer in his employ or under his charge; and the said registrar shall then proceed to examine the person delivering such transcript and the apprenticed labourer respecting whom such doubt shall have arisen, and any witnesses that may be adduced respecting the truth of such transcript; and the said registrar is also empowered, if necessary, to adjourn such examination from time to time as he may see fit.

39. And be it enacted, that the said registrar shall, after such examination, either confirm or correct any such transcript delivered to him as aforesaid, according to the evidences adduced and as he may see fit, and shall thereupon certify and give notice to the party delivering such transcript and to the apprenticed labourer respecting whom such doubt shall have arisen respectively of the decision to which he shall have come in the premises.

40. And be it enacted, that if either the party so delivering to the registrar such transcript as aforesaid, or the apprenticed labourer respecting whom such doubt shall have arisen, be dissatisfied with the decision to which the registrar shall have come in the premises, such party so delivering such transcript may on his own behalf, or the apprenticed labourer respecting whom such doubt shall have arisen, or the registrar on his or her behalf, may apply to the chief justice or to any other justice of the Supreme Court of Judicature within this Colony by petition, setting forth the nature of such decision and the objections thereto, and praying for an appeal and reversal by such judge of such decision.

41. And be it enacted, that the judge to whom any such petition may be preferred shall, without unnecessary delay, proceed in a summary way to hear and decide upon the matter thereof, and the decision of such judge in the premises, whether in confirmation or reversal of the decision of the said registrar, shall be final and conclusive upon the parties.

42. And be it enacted, that it shall be in the power of the Supreme Court of Judicature to make and establish general rules of practice and proceeding upon and for regulating the proceedings of every such petition, in the manner that may be least expensive and most conducive to method, punctuality and dispatch.

43. And be it enacted, that when there shall not be any doubt, or when such proceedings respecting any doubt as aforesaid shall have taken place and shall be determined, the registrar shall forthwith proceed to registrar such apprenticed labourers in books for that purpose, and according to the same form as he has hitherto kept books for the registration or return of slaves, and shall affix to the entry of the name of each prædial attached apprenticed labourer in such book the letters P. A., and of each prædial unattached apprenticed labourer the letters P. U., and of each non-prædial apprenticed labourer the letters N. P.; and shall thereupon lodge every such book of registry or returns with the colonial secretary.

44. And be it enacted, that the said books of registry or return of apprenticed labourers, when so corrected and lodged with the colonial secretary, shall be deposited among the public records; and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such corrected books of registry or returns, or a certified extract therefrom, shall be taken as binding and conclusive evidence upon such question.

45. And be it enacted, that if any person who ought to deliver to the registrar any such transcript as aforesaid, shall neglect, omit or refuse to do so, or to make the affidavit hereinbefore required to be made, or to attend the registrar when required and summoned by him for that purpose, he shall incur a penalty of not more than 25*l.* of current money of the Colony, nor less than 50*s.* of like money; and in the event of the wilful absence of such person it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed and decide any such question as though such person had attended.

46. And be it enacted, that upon from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, the person who on the 31st day of July in the same year shall be the registrar of slaves within this Colony shall at the same rate of salary and fees as in the said Act for establishing a registry of negro and other slaves in the Island of Grenada and its dependencies are provided, continue to hold the office of registrar for the purposes of receiving such transcripts as aforesaid, and of entering the same into such books as aforesaid, and for other the purposes hereinbefore required, until the 31st day of January 1835.

47. And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that every employer of apprenticed labourers shall provide for and allow to every family of such apprenticed labourers employed by him, consisting of not less than four persons, a good and comfortable house, with one or more cabannes or beds, raised at least one foot from the ground; and shall provide and give to each and every such apprenticed labourer an annual allowance of six yards of cloth or pennistoun, eight yards of oznaburgh, or other linen of equal strength and value, one hat or cap, with needles and thread, and a triennial allowance of one blanket, a weekly allowance of two pounds of salted, dried or pickled fish, or such other provisions as may be equivalent thereto, and one quarter of a pint of salt; and shall provide and give to each and every apprenticed labourer, not supported by the cultivation of his or her provision grounds, a weekly allowance of eight pints of flour or six quarts of meal, grain, pulse or other articles of food equally nutritious, in addition to the weekly allowance of salted fish and salt hereinbefore provided for such apprenticed labourers; and that it shall be lawful for any employer to substitute money for the foregoing allowances of food, or any part thereof, thereof, at the marketable value of such allowances of food at the time of such substitution: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any employer from regulating the distribution of the foregoing allowances of clothing and food according to the ages of the respective apprenticed labourers, provided the aggregate amount of such allowances shall not be less in quantity than the rate hereinbefore prescribed; and every employer of apprenticed labourers neglecting or refusing to provide, furnish and give the allowances of food and clothing hereinbefore immediately specified, upon conviction thereof before any special justice of the peace, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 5*l.*, over and above the value of any such allowances of food and clothing omitted to be provided, furnished and given as aforesaid.

48. And whereas it is necessary that a certain portion of time shall be allowed such labourers for the purpose of cultivating their provision grounds, to be deducted from the 45 hours per week which they are required to labour for their employers; Be it therefore enacted, that in each and every year there shall be allowed to every labourer fourteen full working days for the purpose of cultivating their provision grounds, over and above the time allotted them by the 51st clause of this Act, and not including Christmas-day and New Year's-day, which shall be considered holidays.

49. And whereas it is necessary that in cases where such apprenticed labourers are supported wholly or in part by the cultivation of their provision grounds, that a certain quantity of land should be allotted them for that purpose: And whereas the most fertile land and that which is best adapted for the growth of provisions, is, in some cases, a considerable distance from their place of abode, but to deprive them of such lands and compel them to work exhausted soils or lands of inferior description, but nearer to their place of abode, would cause great dissatisfaction and loss to such apprenticed labourers; Be it therefore enacted, that nothing herein contained shall tend to disturb such apprenticed labourers in the enjoyment of mountain provision grounds during the continuance of their apprenticeship, or compel any employer to procure other grounds in lieu thereof; and if any such employer shall refuse or neglect to allot to his apprenticed labourer sufficient land adapted for the growth of provisions, and at and after the rate of one quarter of an acre for each and every labourer, he shall, on conviction before the special justice, incur and be liable to a fine of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 50*l.* for every neglect or refusal so to do.

50. And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, by wilful neglect or indolence, during his or her own time, suffer his or her house or provision ground to fall into decay and bad order, it shall and may be lawful for the employer of such apprenticed labourer, with the sanction, in writing, of any special justice, to be obtained upon proof before him of such neglect or indolence, to put the house or provision ground of such apprenticed labourer into proper order for his or her comfort and support, and to deduct an equivalent quantity of labour from his or her own time, not exceeding fifteen hours in any one week.

51. And be it enacted, that no labourer or labourers shall be compelled to perform any agricultural or other labour for the benefit, profit or advantage of his or her employer, from the hour of six o'clock on Saturday morning, until six o'clock on Monday morning, unless sentenced so to do by any special justice or justices, mariners, watchmen, stock-keepers, domestics and attendants on the sick excepted: provided always, that such stock-keepers, domestics or attendants on the sick, shall be allowed so much time as may be equivalent to the time in which they may be so employed as aforesaid, and except also, when called upon to arrest any fire or flood, or to remedy the effect of any fire, flood, hurricane or earthquake, or the failure of any part of the machinery or boiling apparatus of a sugar plantation, or in the necessary attendance on any wash or liquor in distilleries, or accidents to stock; and in all cases of urgent necessity, it shall be lawful for the employer or any other person or persons acting under him, when such necessity shall occur, to require and compel the immediate and continued service of any or all the apprenticed labourers, during such emergency; and that the hours of agricultural labour shall be as follows; from six o'clock in the morning until half-past seven o'clock, (when half an hour shall be allowed the labourers for breakfast); from eight until twelve o'clock, (when two full hours shall be allowed for dinner), and from half-past two, (allowing half an hour for each labourer to reach his or her destined place of employment); until the hour of six in the evening; and any labourer not appearing at his or her respective duties at the hours and times hereinbefore limited for labour, or who shall unlawfully absent himself or herself from his or her employment during the hours and times of labour hereinbefore described, shall be deemed wilfully absent, and on conviction before the special justice of the district, be compelled to serve his or her employer double such time of absence, out of the time allotted to him, provided such forfeiture shall not exceed three hours in any one day, or fifteen hours in any one week.

52. And whereas at certain periods of the year it is necessary to employ apprenticed labourers about certain manufacturing processes during the night time; Be it therefore enacted, that nothing herein contained shall render the employment of labourers in the night time illegal, provided that such apprenticed labourers shall not be required or compelled to labour for more than nine hours in the whole on any one day, the day being for that purpose understood to commence from the hour of twelve at night, and to terminate at the hour of twelve the succeeding night.

53. And be it enacted, that upon any plantation or estate in these Islands, to which such apprenticed labourers shall be attached, there shall be, under a penalty of 50*l.*, a good and sufficient sufficient hospital in a proper and healthy situation, to be approved of by the medical attendant of such estate, for the reception and cure of all sick and infirm apprenticed labourers; and the employer or other person for the time being, having the charge of such plantation and apprenticed labourers, is hereby respectively required and directed to keep a hospital book, with the names of the apprenticed labourers admitted, the dates of their admission, and also of their dismission or death, and in which book shall be inserted by the medical attendant of the said plantation, the nature of their complaints or diseases, prescriptions and treatment; and such employer is hereby required to employ some person duly qualified in the practice of physic and surgery, to attend such apprenticed labourers as occasion may require; provided such medical practitioner can be procured, and shall provide such medicine, food and other necessaries as shall be deemed requisite by such medical practitioner, and as heretofore been customary, under a penalty, not exceeding 5*l.* for every neglect or refusal so to do.

54. And be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprentice, whose name shall appear in the book aforesaid, to leave the hospital without the permission of the medical attendant or his employer; and that it shall be lawful for the employer to keep such hospital locked up.

55. And be it enacted, that for every hour in which any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service without legal cause, such apprenticed labourer being thereof convicted before the special justice of the district, shall be compelled to serve his or her employer two extra hours, provided that such extra hours shall not exceed fifteen in the whole in any one week; and any apprenticed labourer absenting himself or herself without legal cause, from his or her employer's service for more than nine hours in any one week, and being thereof convicted before the special justice of the district, shall be adjudged a deserter; and any apprenticed labourer absenting himself or herself without lawful cause, from his or her employer's service for two days during one week, whether the said two days of such labourer's absence shall be successive days of the week or not, and being thereof convicted before the special justice of the district, shall be adjudged a vagabond; and any apprenticed labourer absenting himself or herself without legal cause from his or her employer's service for five days in any one week, and being thereof convicted before the special justice of the district, shall be adjudged a runaway.

56. And be it enacted, that any apprenticed labourers, who may be adjudged deserters, shall by the said special justice of the district, be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; that any apprenticed labourers who may be adjudged vagabonds, shall by the said special justice be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, and to any number of stripes, not exceeding fifteen; that any apprenticed labourers who may be adjudged runaways, shall by the said special justice be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to any number of stripes, not exceeding thirty; and any apprenticed labourer absenting himself or herself seven days or upwards from his or her employer's service without a legal cause, shall on conviction thereof before the special justice of the district, be adjudged a notorious runaway, and shall suffer three months' imprisonment and hard labour, and if a male, whipping, not exceeding thirty-nine stripes.

57. And be it enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted of performing his or her work indolently, carelessly or negligently, shall, for the first offence, be adjudged by the said special justice of the district, to labour in his or her employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week; for the second offence, to solitary confinement, with or without hard labour, for any time not exceeding one week; and for the third, or any other subsequent offence, to solitary confinement, with or without hard labour, for any time not exceeding one fortnight, with whipping, not exceeding twenty stripes.

58. And be it enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who, by the careless use of fire, shall endanger the property of his or her employer, or that of any other person, or who shall wantonly injure the property of his or her employer, or who shall neglect or ill-use the cattle or other live stock of his or her employer, or that of any other person, or who shall by wilful negligence expose the property of his or her employer, or of any other person, to any damage or injury, shall, for every such offence hereinbefore specified, be adjudged, in the discretion of the special justice of the district, either to extra labour in his or her employer's service, for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes, not exceeding thirty, or to any two or more of such punishments: provided always, that this enactment shall not exempt any such apprenticed labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him or her done or committed, although no such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to be punished under this Act, and prosecuted for the same offence at law.

59. And be it enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall disobey the lawful commands of his or her employer, shall be liable upon conviction thereof before the special justice of the district, to any one or more of the punishments last aforesaid.

60. And be it further enacted, that any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall agree or combine together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employer or employers, shall, upon conviction thereof before the special justice of the district, be deemed guilty guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be adjudged by such special justice to solitary confinement, with or without hard labour, for any period, not exceeding six months, with whipping, not exceeding thirty-nine stripes.

61. And be it enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself or herself in an insolent and insubordinate manner towards his or her employer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour, shall for every such offence be liable, on conviction before the special justice of the district, to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping, not exceeding fifteen stripes: provided always, that no female apprenticed labourer shall be subject to be punished by whipping for any offence by her committed, but that in all the cases aforesaid, in which that punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying to the cases of male apprenticed labourers only; and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any such male apprenticed labourer offending as aforesaid, shall, when committed by female apprenticed labourers, be punished by hard labour or by confinement in the public stocks, and by distinguishing marks or dresses, or by solitary confinement; the stocks to be employed for such purpose of punishing by confinement therein of the female apprenticed labourers, shall be according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the Governor; and no female apprenticed labourer shall, for any offecnce by her committed, be confined in such public stocks after sunset or before sunrise, or for more than eight hours in the whole for any one day: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any special justice from sentencing any apprenticed labourer to solitary confinement on the estate to which he is attached or may be working, if he should so deem fit.

62. And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer appointed by his employer or any other person acting under his orders, to watch by night, shall neglect or refuse to proceed to, and to continue in the punctual performance of that duty, according to the orders and directions given him, every such apprenticed labourer so offending, who shall not prove to the satisfaction of the special justice that he was prevented by sickness or other unavoidable cause, from the performance of such duty, shall, on conviction before such special justice, be adjudged to the same punishment as is herein provided for the punishment of indolence.

63. And whereas a practice hath prevailed, of gangs of labourers leaving the estates to which they are attached for the purpose of preferring complaints, and such practice hath a tendency to disturb the peace of the Colony, and affords an evil example to peaceable and well-disposed labourers; Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall not be lawful for any gang of apprenticed labourers to leave the estate to which they are attached, for the purpose of preferring complaints to any person or persons whatsoever, but in all cases where such gang may feel themselves aggrieved, they shall select one or more of their number, not exceeding three, and such person or persons so selected shall apply to his her or their employer for a pass, but in case of refusal, may proceed without molestation or hindrance, to the special justice of the district, and no other person, for the purpose of laying before him any complaint, or making to him any application respecting any matter or thing cognizable by such special justice; and any person or persons who shall by force, menace or intimidation, or any other unlawful means, prevent any apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers so selected, from resorting to such special justice for any such purpose as aforesaid, or from returning to his or her place of abode, after having so resorted to any such special justice, shall be deemed and considered guilty of a misdemeanor, and for such misdemeanor shall forfeit the sum of 5*l.*; provided such apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers, so selected as aforesaid, shall resort to and return from such special justice with due diligence, and without any unnecessary loss of time; and such special justice on such complaint or application shall make diligent inquiry into the premises, and afford redress on the grievance being proved according to the exigency of the case, and in strict conformity with the provisions of this Act: but if it shall appear to such special justice that such complaint or application is without foundation, such special justice shall adjudge the complainant or complainants, or any other apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers that may have been the ringleaders or instigators of such groundless complaints, to work in the service of his her or their employer for any time not exceeding in the whole fifteen extra hours in any one week, or if it shall appear to such special justice that the alleged complaint is frivolous, vexatious or malicious, he shall adjudge such complainants to the same punishment as is hereinbefore awarded to the same for frivolous, vexatious or malicious complaints.

64. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the person administering the government of this Colony for the time being, and he is hereby authorized and required by and with the consent of his council, on or before the 1st day of January, in each and every year, to nominate and appoint three experienced and intelligent persons in each district, as inspectors, for the purpose of ascertaining and computing the amount of work to be performed by each labourer or labourers on any plantation or estate; and such inspectors shall, within ten days after they have received notice of such appointment, make oath before the special justice of the district, to the faithful discharge of their duties as inspectors; and in cases where any dispute may arise between the employer and any labourer or labourers as to the quantity of work allotted to or performed by such labourer or labourers, it shall and may be lawful for such inspectors, on the application or complaint of either party, to proceed to the estate on which such complaint is made, and examine the work allotted to or performed by such labourer or labourers; and, if after such examination, it shall appear to such inspectors, or a majority of them, that the work allotted to or performed by such labourer or labourers is more than he she or they ought to be compelled in future to perform, it shall be the duty of such inspectors to reduce such allotted work to a reasonable and moderate quantity, as in their experience and judgment they may see fit; but if it shall appear to such inspectors, or a majority of them, that the work allotted to or performed by such labourer or labourers is moderate and reasonable, and no more than the said labourer or labourers ought and might or should be compelled to perform, the said inspectors, or a majority of them, are hereby authorized and required to grant a certificate thereof to the employer of such labourer or labourers, who may produce the same to the special justice of the district, together with the name or names of any labourer or labourers who hath or have refused, or may continue to refuse to perform such work so allotted to them, and adjudged by the said inspectors to be reasonable and moderate; and such special justice is hereby authorized and required to adjudge such punishment to such refractory labourers as is hereinbefore provided for the punishment of indolence.

65. And whereas it is necessary for the maintenance of good order and discipline amongst the apprenticed labourers, and for the temporary security of offenders, that a limited authority should be vested in the employers; Be it therefore enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall be guilty, or suspected of being guilty of any offence set forth in this Act, or of any other offence that would subject such offender to trial in the Supreme Court of Judicature, for felony or misdemeanor, under the laws in force in this Colony, it shall and may be lawful for such employer to secure, or cause to be secured, such offender, in some wholesome place of confinement, on the plantation to which such offender shall be attached, for a period not exceeding twenty-four hours, or until such offender can be brought before any special justice, or other competent authority.

66. And be it enacted, that if any person or persons shall wrongfully, maliciously, or without sufficient cause, confine any apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, such person or persons being convicted thereof before any special justice, shall incur and be liable to a fine of not less than ten nor more than twenty shillings, which fine shall be paid to the party aggrieved.

67. And be it enacted, that all the offences cognizable by the special justice under this Act, shall be inquired of by the magistrates having special commissions, and not by any other justice of the peace: provided always, that any such special justice may, if he shall see occasion, refer any such case for trial to the Supreme Court of Judicature of this Island.

68. And be it enacted, that if the employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall by force or fraud protract the weekly services of such apprenticed labourer beyond the period by this Act allowed for that purpose, such employer so offending, upon conviction thereof before the special justice of the district, shall forfeit, for the benefit of such apprenticed labourer, the sum of one shilling in respect of every hour which such apprenticed labourer's weekly service shall have been protracted.

69. And be it enacted, that it shall be the duty of every employer of apprenticed labourers, to intimate to the apprenticed labourers in his or her employment, the commencement and the close of the legal hours of labour, for which purpose a signal shall be given in such manner as shall, in reference to each plantation, have been previously approved of by the special justice of the district, which signal shall always be of such a nature as to be distinctly visible or audible to the several prædial apprenticed labourers in the service of any such employer as aforesaid.

70. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any employer and apprenticed labourer mutually to contract together for work to be done either by day or by week, for such wages or consideration as they may agree upon: provided always, that such contracts or engagements shall be sanctioned by a special justice, and that no such agreement shall be for a longer period than one year, and that no task work shall be imposed upon any body of apprenticed labourers, except by consent of a majority thereof.

71. And be it enacted, that upon proof being made, to the satisfaction of the special justice of the district, of the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra services, it shall be competent to such special justice, and he is hereby authorized to award execution against such employer as aforesaid, for the amount of such consideration; and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such award, to issue his warrant in the nature of an execution, and levy the same upon the produce, utensils and other chattels upon such plantation, which execution shall be executed by the serjeant of the police of the district, who shall thereunder seize and sell so much of such produce, utensils or other chattels as may be found upon such plantation, and as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, delivering over the surplus, if any, to such employer, which execution shall be in the form hereto annexed, marked (N.)

72. And be it enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall violate the terms of any contract as aforesaid, on conviction thereof before any special justice, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are provided in respect of the violation by any such apprenticed labourer, of the duties to be by him or her performed in the discharge of the services owing by him or her to such his or her employer under this Act.

73. And be it enacted, that every married woman, being an apprenticed labourer, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of twelve years and upwards, notwithstanding his or her infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid.

74. And

74. And be it enacted, that if any employer of any apprenticed labourer shall whip, beat, imprison or confine in the stocks (save and except as herein provided,) or otherwise maltreat any such apprenticed labourer, or shall, by way of punishment, commit any assault upon his or her person, such employer shall incur a penalty, to be imposed by such special justice as aforesaid, not exceeding five pounds, with imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, in default of the payment of such fine.

75. And be it enacted, that in any such case as last aforesaid, it shall be competent to any such apprenticed labourer, instead of preferring his or her complaint to the special justice of the district in which he or she resides, to maintain any civil suit or action, as in the case of any other free person, for damages for such assault; and it shall also be competent to such special justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit the offender, in default of bail, to take his trial for such offence, before any court having jurisdiction in the premises; and that if any such employer, being the person entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer, shall be convicted before any court of competent jurisdiction, of any cruelty towards his or her apprenticed labourer, then such apprenticed labourer shall be discharged from his or her apprenticeship, by order of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

76. And be it enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace, who shall be present at the same, shall cause a flag or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited, as a warning to all persons then present to separate and disperse quietly; and that all persons who, at the expiration of ten minutes from the exhibition of such flag or signal, shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall, on conviction before any justice of the peace, be liable to imprisonment for any time not exceeding twelve months, and to solitary confinement, with or without hard labour for any part of such time.

77. And be it enacted, that no prædial apprenticed labourer shall reside beyond the limits of the plantation on which he or she may be attached, on or after the 1st day of August next, unless by the authority or with the consent of his or her employer.

78. And be it enacted, that every prædial apprenticed labourer found beyond the limits of the estate to which such apprenticed labourer may be attached, excepting on his or her way to and from market, or to or from some place of public worship, or to or from the justice of the district, for the purpose of making any complaint or application, or in the work and duty of the estate, not having with him or her a written pass from his or her employer, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained by any person or persons, and shall, on conviction thereof before the special justice of the district, be adjudged a vagabond, and be punished accordingly: provided that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or construed to abridge or any way interfere with the full and free use and enjoyment by such apprentices of the time allotted to them as their own, under and by virtue of this Act.

79. And be it enacted, that if it shall be made to appear, to the satisfaction of any special justice, that any apprenticed labourers have, without lawful authority, established themselves in any part of the Colony as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon them by this Act, such justice shall cause any such community to be dislodged, and if necessary, shall also cause their habitations to be taken down and removed or destroyed.

80. And be it enacted, that all officers and privates of the Colonial Militia shall be aiding and carrying into effect any directions which may be issued by the Governor at the instance of any special justice, for dislodging any such community of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, or for any other purpose under this Act that may be deemed requisite by the Governor.

81. And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer, being in good health and able to work, and being the father of any child under the age of 12 years, upon the estate to which any such apprenticed labourer is attached, such child not being an apprenticed labourer, and the father of such child not making adequate provision for the subsistence of such child, it shall be lawful for any special justice to adjudge any such apprenticed labourer to labour during his own time, and to apply the earnings of such labourer towards the support and maintenance of any such child until such apprenticed labourer shall voluntarily and sufficiently provide for the subsistence of such child.

82. And be it enacted, that for effecting the purpose last aforesaid, such special justice as aforesaid may hire out the extra labour of any such father to any person who may be willing to agree for the same, or to labour on any public works or on the public roads on the best terms which can be procured; and that such compulsory labour as aforesaid shall not be continued longer than may be necessary to provide for the maintenance of the child of such apprenticed labourer for one month in advance.

83. And be it enacted, that in case any such child so unprovided for as aforesaid, shall have no father living, then the regulations aforesaid shall apply to the mother of such child if alive and competent by her labour to provide for the maintenance of such child.

84. And be it enacted, that all the penalties provided by this Act in case of indolence, neglect of work or otherwise, in respect of labour performed by the apprenticed labourers in the service of their employers, shall apply to the case of labour undertaken for the maintenance of any such child as aforesaid, by virtue of any such order as aforesaid.

85. And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, without lawful authority, enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty, or to any other person, it shall be lawful for and the duty of any special justice to dispossess such labourer from such land and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same, with all crops growing thereupon, to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not within one month after such seizure appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the special justice shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon to be sold, and the proceeds of such sale to be paid over to the public treasurer of this Island in trust for the owner of such lands and goods, and if not claimed within twelve months after the same, shall be applied to the public uses of the Colony.

86. And be it enacted, that the special justice may further adjudge any apprenticed labourer unlawfully taking possession of such lands, to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of such special justice that such possession was taken fraudulently, and with knowledge that the party had no lawful claim to such possession.

87. And be it enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall quit the Colony without a passport from the Governor for the time being, which passport shall not be granted except with the written consent of the employer of such apprenticed labourer; and any apprenticed labourer quitting or attempting to quit the Colony without such passport shall be liable, upon conviction thereof before any special justice, to solitary confinement with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding one month.

88. And be it enacted, that all apprenticed labourers whose ordinary occupation is on the sea, shall be registered as such by their employers at the office of the special justice of the district to which they belong, who shall furnish such apprenticed labourer with a certificate of such registration.

89. And be enacted, that all persons removing or assisting to remove any apprenticed labourer from the Colony, in any boat, canoe or vessel without a passport from the Governor, shall, upon conviction thereof before any special justice, be liable to a penalty of 100 l., and in default of payment to imprisonment in the common gaol of this Island for any time not exceeding six months, such fine to be paid to the person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer so removed or intended to be removed.

90. And be it enacted, that no fee of office shall hereafter be received, demanded or payable upon, for or on account, or in respect of the discharge and release of any apprenticed labourer; and if any special justice shall hereafter demand, accept or receive any fee of office for the same respectively, the special justice so offending shall incur and become liable to the payment of a fine, amounting to not less than 1 l. nor more than 5 l. over and above the amount of the fee so by him received.

91. And be it enacted, that for the prevention of doubts as to the power of the employer of apprenticed labourers to discharge and release apprenticed labourers at their pleasure, it is further enacted, that, subject to the regulations hereinafter made, any person being the employer of any apprenticed labourer may, by his or her last will, or by deed under his or her hand or seal, at his or her pleasure, discharge and release any such apprenticed labourers from his or her apprenticeship, so far as relates to the interest of every such testator or grantor; and that every such discharge shall, as far as relates to the interest of such testator or grantor, as the case may be, but no further or otherwise, be valid and effectual in the law for the discharge or release of such apprenticed labourer: provided nevertheless, that no employer having a partial or temporary interest in any apprenticed labourer may, to the extent of such interest, effect his or her discharge or release gratuitously, unless all other persons having a partial, future or reversionary interest in such apprenticed labourer shall consent to be parties to such discharge or release, or unless such partial, future or reversionary interest shall be purchased in the manner hereinafter provided.

92. And be it enacted, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of fifty years or upwards, or shall then be labouring under any disease or mental or bodily infirmity as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom.

93. And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall be desirous of purchasing the remaining period of his or her apprenticeship, and his or her employer shall refuse to consent thereto, it shall and may be lawful for such apprenticed labourer to apply to the special justice of the district in which he resides, who, upon such application, shall nominate and appoint one disinterested and experienced person as an appraiser on the part and behalf of such apprenticed labourer, and shall give notice to the employer of such application and appointment, and the employer of such apprenticed labourer shall, within 10 days after receiving such notice as aforesaid, nominate and appoint one other person as an appraiser on his own part and behalf; the appraisers thus respectively nominated and appointed shall make oath before the special justice of the district faithfully to discharge the duties of their office, and shall, without any unnecessary delay, fairly and impartially estimate the value of the services of such apprenticed labourer for the remaining period of his apprenticeship; and for this purpose the said special justice shall summon the parties interested to attend the said appraisers at any time or place within his district mentioned in such summons; and the said appraisers having agreed on the sum as the value of the remaining services of such apprenticed labourer, shall grant a certificate thereof to the party applying for the same, and which sum being tendered or paid into the hands of the employer by the apprenticed labourer, or any person on his behalf, shall be taken and considered as a full discharge and release of such apprenticed labourer from his apprenticeship as aforesaid, and from any future bondage or service to his said employer.

94. And be it enacted, that if any difference shall arise between the appraisers so nominated and appointed as aforesaid, as to the value of the services of the apprenticed labourer so applying for his release from apprenticeship, it shall and may be lawful for the said appraisers to nominate and appoint an umpire, and such umpire shall make oath before the special justice faithfully to discharge his duty as umpire, and shall, within 10 days therefrom, give his decision in writing, subscribed by his name, to the party applying for the same, and which decision, when so given, shall be final and conclusive, and the sum mentioned therein shall be considered the value of the services of the apprenticed labourer for his unexpired term of apprenticeship, and when paid to his employer shall be a full discharge of such apprenticed labourer from his apprenticeship as aforesaid.

95. And be it enacted, that it shall be the duty of the special justice to whom any apprenticed labourer may apply for his discharge and release from apprenticeship, before any consideration is tendered or paid for such discharge and release, to inquire and ascertain that the employer of such apprenticed labourer is the person duly authorized by law to grant such discharge and release as aforesaid.

96. And be it enacted, that when there shall be any disputed title or adverse claim to the money to arise from the discharge of any apprenticed labourer, by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned, the same shall be paid into the hands of the public treasurer of the said Island by the special justice, to be invested in the purchase, in his name, of any public funds or securities of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the interest accruing on such money in the public funds so to be purchased as aforesaid, and the dividends payable thereupon, shall be the property of the person or persons who was or were the employer and beneficially interested in the services of such discharged apprenticed labourer, and shall be subject and liable to all such and the same trusts, uses, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands, of what nature or kind soever, as such apprenticed labourer was held upon.

97. And be it enacted, that when, with the consent of any two or more special justices, any person entitled to the services of any prædial apprenticed labourer attached to the soil shall be desirous of transferring or removing his or her services to any other estate or plantation within this Colony, to such person belonging, under the permission mentioned and contained in that behalf in the 9th section of the said Act of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, it shall be lawful for any two or more special justices, and they are hereby required, to give the employer or employers of such prædial attached apprenticed labourers their consent in writing to any such transfer or removal; provided that such transfer or removal will not have the effect of separating any such prædial attached apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, and that such transfer or removal will not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of any such prædial attached apprenticed labourer; and such written consent to any such transfer or removal shall be expressed in the terms or to the effect following, that is to say:—

"Memorandum:—That we (the special justices) two of His Majesty's justices of the peace, duly constituted for the special purpose of giving effect to an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Dominions, and for other purposes therein mentioned, having received notice that A. B., who is entitled to the services of certain prædial apprenticed labourers attached to his estate or plantation called ————————, within this Colony, and whose names are mentioned or contained in the schedule hereunder written, or hereunto annexed, is desirous of transferring or removing such apprenticed labourers and their services to another estate or plantation called ————————, also to the said A. B. belonging, or in his possession, within this Colony; and we the said justices, having ascertained that such transfer or removal will not have the effect of separating any such prædial apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, and that such transfer or removal will not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of any such prædial apprenticed labourer so attached as aforesaid, do hereby consent, license and permit that the said A. B. do and may transfer and remove all and every the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to his said estate or plantation called ————————, within this Colony, and whose names are mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed, or hereunder written, from and off the said estate or plantation called ———————— to the plantation or estate called ————————, also to him belonging, or in his possession, within this Colony, and at and upon such last-mentioned estate or plantation to work the said prædial apprenticed labourers and their labour and services to have and enjoy thereat and thereupon, as fully, beneficially and amply as if such prædial apprenticed labourers were attached to the said estate or plantation called ————————, for and during all or any part of the estate, term or interest of him the said A. B. in or of such prædial apprenticed labourer's services and term of apprenticeship. In witness, &c." Which said consent shall be executed by and under the hands and seals of the said justices respectively, and shall be duly entered in a book by such justices to be for that purpose provided.

98. And whereas it has hitherto been the practice and may hereafter be necessary to employ tradesmen, artificers and other labourers upon estates not belonging to their employers, for the purpose of erecting or repairing buildings, machinery or boiling apparatus; Be it therefore enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to prevent the temporary employment of any tradesman, artificer or other labourer upon estates or lands not belonging to their employers, for the purposes aforesaid, or any other lawful purpose, and during the hours of labour hereinbefore described: provided such temporary employment shall not disturb any such apprenticed labourer in the possession and enjoyment of his house and provision grounds upon the estate to which he is attached.

99. And whereas it may happen that children who have not attained the age of six years on the said 1st day of August 1834, or that children who after that day may be born to any female apprenticed labourers may not be properly supported by their parents, and that no other person may be disposed voluntarily to undertake the support of such children; Be it enacted, that if any child who on the said 1st day of August 1834 had not completed his sixth year, or if any child to which any female apprenticed labourer may give birth on or after the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be brought before a special justice, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of such justice that any such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, and that such child has not completed the age of 12 years, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother of such child, if such person shall be willing to accept the same; but in case it shall be made to appear to any such justice that such person aforesaid is unwilling, unable or unfit to enter into such indenture and properly to perform the covenants thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required, to bind any such child to any other person to be by him for that purpose approved of, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and the term of such apprenticeship of any such child shall by such indenture be limited and made to continue in force until such child shall have completed his 21st year, and no longer; and every child so apprenticed as aforesaid by the order of any such special justice aforesaid, shall during his apprenticeship be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work or labour to be by them done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be to him furnished, as any other such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid: provided always, that the said indenture of apprenticeship shall contain sufficient words of obligation upon the employer to allow reasonable time and opportunity for the education and religious instruction of such child, and shall be recorded by the special justice in his office; the form of which indenture shall be as follows, viz. "This indenture made the ———— day of ————, in the year of our Lord one thousand, &c., between J. P., esq., one of His Majesty's justices of the peace of and for the district of ———— in the Island of Grenada (or Carriacou within the Colony of Grenada), by special commission duly constituted and appointed, and by virtue of the powers in that behalf authorizing and requiring me, and of all other powers in me vested, on behalf of ————, a child of the age of ———— years, or thereabout, of the one part, and A. B. of ————, of the other part: Whereas, the said (child) is the infant child of ————, a female prædial apprenticed labourer attached to the plantation or estate called ————, belonging to or in the possession of the said A. B., and situate, &c., [or, as the case may be], is the infant child of ————, a female unattached prædial apprenticed labourer, [or a female non-prædial apprenticed labourer] in the employ of the said A. B., [or, as the case may be, in the employ of C. D., of, &c.]: Now this indenture witnesseth, that in consideration of the covenants hereinafter contained, and on the part and behalf of the said A. B. and those hereafter to claim through or under him, to be performed, kept and fulfilled, and by virtue of such powers as aforesaid, the said S. I., as such special justice as aforesaid, hath placed and bounden, and by these presents doth place and bind the said ————, the infant child of the said ————, unto and with the said A. B., his heirs, executors and assigns, as a prædial apprenticed labourer, and to be attached to the said plantation or estate called, &c., belonging to the said A. B. as hereinbefore mentioned [or as an unattached prædial apprenticed labourer, or as a non-prædial apprenticed labourer], and as such well and truly and faithfully to serve and obey the said A. B. and those hereafter to claim through or under him, and diligently attend to the business of him the said A. B. and those hereafter to claim through or under him, according to the full force, true intent and meaning of a certain statute passed in and by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves,' and according to the full force and effect, true intent and meaning of and subject to the several rules and regulations respectively mentioned and contained in an Act of the Legislature of this Colony, intituled, 'An Act,' [here set out the title of this Act] and bearing date, &c.; and it is hereby expressly declared by the said S. I., as such special justice as aforesaid, that the term of the said apprenticeship of the said————, the child of the said ————, is to be and continue from henceforth until the ———— day of ————, which will be in the year one thousand———— &c., when the said ———— will attain his age of 21 years and no longer: provided, nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent the said A. B., or those hereafter to claim through or under him, from voluntarily discharging the said ———— from his said apprenticeship at any time before the expiration of the said term, in manner and form hereinbefore limited for the said apprenticeship, nor to prevent the said ————, or any person on his behalf, from purchasing his discharge from the said apprenticeship, according to the said statute of the 3d and 4th of William the Fourth, and the said Act of the ——— day of——— in the case of other apprenticed labourers: and in consideration of such apprenticeship, and all benefit and advantage incident thereto, and of all and all manner of interest, profit or advantage, claim and demand, to be had, gotten or derived therefrom, and of the services, obedience and duty of the said ————, he, the said A. B., doth hereby for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, covenant, promise and agree, with and to the said S. I., as such special justice as aforesaid, and his successors in office for the time being, in manner following; that is to say, that he, the said A. B., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, or those hereafter to claim through or under him, shall and will during the continuance of the said apprenticeship of the said ———— well and truly and punctually find, provide and supply, at the costs and charges of him the said A. B., and of those hereafter to claim through or under him, to and for the said ———— as such ———— apprenticed labourer, such amount, quantity and quality of food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance and such other maintenance and allowances as are in and by the said Act of the ———— day of———— expressly required and expressed: And also shall and will afford, grant and allow reasonable and sufficient time, and every fit and adequate opportunity for the moral and religious instruction and education of the said ———— during the continuance of his said apprenticeship term.

100. And be it enacted, that upon and along with every gift, demise, lease, grant, bargain, sale, contract, deed, conveyance or will, whereby any plantation or estate shall pass and be transferred or made over from any person or persons entitled to the same, unto any other person or persons, and to which said plantation or estate any prædial apprenticed labourers shall or may be at that time attached, all and every the apprenticeship of such prædial apprenticed labourers respectively attached thereto, and also all and all manner of interest, profit or advantage, claim and demand whatsoever, and the services and duty of such prædial apprenticed labourers respectively so attached thereto, shall, unless otherwise in and by any such demise, lease, grant, bargain, sale, contract, deed, conveyance or will expressed or reserved, and also either with or without any words to be for that purpose therein contained, but by force and virtue of this present Act, pass and be transferred or made over as herein aforesaid, for and during all the then residue and remainder of the apprenticeship of such prædial apprenticed labourers so respectively attached to such plantation or estate.

101. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any person for the time being entitled to the services of any attached or unattached prædial apprenticed labourers or non-prædial apprenticed labourers, to pass or transfer any apprenticeship, and all benefit and advantage incident to any apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer, and all and all manner of interest, profit, advantage, claim and demand whatsoever, and the services and duty which he may have of, in and to such apprenticed labourers, by last will and testament in writing, to be executed and delivered by the testator in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses, and duly proved and registered or recorded as other wills; or by a deed or instrument in writing, in the form or to the effect following; that is to say, "To all to whom these presents shall come, A. B. [the grantor] of, &c., and C. D. [the grantee] of, &c., send greeting: It is hereby mutually agreed and declared between and by the said A. B. and the said C. D., as follows; that is to say, that in consideration of [state the consideration] the said A. B. being the employer, and as such entitled to the services of the several apprenticed labourers named in the schedule hereunder written or hereunto annexed, hath granted, released, assigned and set over, and by these presents doth grant, release, assign and set over unto the said C. D., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns [or unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators and assigns, as the case may require] all the apprenticeship of the several and respective apprenticed labourers named in the schedule hereunder written or hereunto annexed, and all benefit and advantage incident thereto, and all and all manner of interest, profit and advantage, claim and demand whatsoever of him, the said A. B., and his heirs [or of him, the said A. B., his executors or administrators, as the case may require] of in or to the same apprenticeship of the said apprenticed labourers respectively; and the services and duty of them, the said apprenticed labourers, respectively, during the residue and remainder [or for and during the space of ———— now next ensuing of the residue and remainder] which is yet to come, and unexpired of their respective apprenticeship, to have and to hold the same apprenticeship of the said several and respective apprenticed labourers and other the premises hereinbefore mentioned, unto the said C. D., his heirs and assigns [or unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators and assigns] from henceforth, for and during all the residue and remainder [or, as the case may be and require] for and during the space of ———— now next ensuing, of the residue and remainder which is yet to come and unexpired of their respective apprenticeship, [if the transfer be by way of hiring out, add as follows] subject to the payment by the said C. D., his heirs or assigns, or his executors, administrators or assigns, unto the said A. B., his heirs or assigns, or his executors, administrators or assigns, of the sum of ————————, of current money of this Colony, for each and every year, or month, half year, &c., of the said apprenticeship of the said apprenticed labourers, [add any covenants that may be requisite.] In witness, &c." And which said deed shall be executed by the respective parties thereto, in the presence of and attested by one or more credible witness or witnesses, and duly proved upon the oath of any one witness before any special justice, and recorded in his office: provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall by virtue of any will or testament, conveyance or contract, be subject or liable to be separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her.

102. And be it enacted, that whenever any person seised or possessed of, or entitled to any plantation or estate to which any prædial apprenticed labourers may be attached, shall die intestate, as to any such plantation or estate, and as to the apprenticeship and services of the said prædial apprenticed labourers attached thereto, then the person or persons who shall succeed to or become seised or possessed of or entitled to such plantation or estate, shall also thereupon become and be entitled to the services of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached thereto, and that whenever any person entitled to the services of any prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to any plantation or estate, and whenever any person entitled to the services of any non-prædial apprenticed labourers shall die intestate, as to the services of such prædial apprenticed labourers not attached, and as to the services of such non-prædial apprenticed labourers, then, and in each of such two last-mentioned cases, the person or persons who shall happen to be heir or heirs-at-law of the person so dying intestate, shall by descent succeed and become entitled to the services of all such prædial apprenticed labourers not attached, and non-prædial apprenticed labourers.

103. And be it enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall, during the term or continuance of his apprenticeship, be competent or compelled, except in cases of emergency hereinafter mentioned, to serve in the militia forces of this Colony, or to hold any office, civil or military, in this Colony: provided, however, that in all cases of invasion, rebellion or any public danger, it shall be lawful for such apprenticed labourers as may be approved by the Governor, to take up arms and to serve in the militia aforesaid, or in their assistance, during the time of any such invasion, rebellion or public danger; and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall extend or to be construed to extend to prevent any apprenticed labourers from holding any office in any corporation or body politic, or in any church or ecclesiastical society, nor to prevent any prædial apprenticed labourer from holding and exercising upon the estate to which he may be attached, or in cases of emergency, upon any other estate within the same district, the office and duties of constable or policeman, at all times when nominated by his employer, and duly sanctioned and confirmed by the Supreme Court of Judicature.

104. And be it enacted, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of any apprenticed labourer he shall not be liable to imprisonment, but shall be exempt from being imprisoned, arrested or held to bail, for any contract or debt by him incurred or made.

105. And be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourers, to compel or oblige such apprenticed labourers to work or labour upon Sundays, except in works of necessity, or in domestic services, or in the watching and protection of property, or in tending of cattle or stock, nor shall any other apprenticed labourers be hindered or prevented from attending any where on Sundays for religious worship at their respective free-will and pleasure.

106. And be it enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, during the continuance of his apprenticeship, wilfully absent himself from the service of his employer, and be thereof convicted before the special justice, such apprenticed labourer shall, at any time after the period of his apprenticeship, be compelled to serve his employer for so long a time as his employer shall have been so deprived of his services, unless he shall make satisfaction to his employer for the loss he shall have sustained by such deprivation of his services, and so from time to time as often as any such apprenticed labourer shall be so convicted of wilfully absenting himself, whereby his employer shall be deprived of his services before his term of apprenticeship shall be expired; and in case any such apprenticed labourer shall refuse to serve as hereby required, or to make such satisfaction to his employer, such employer may complain to the special justice of the district wherein he shall then reside, who shall issue a warrant, under his hand and seal, for apprehending any such apprenticed labourer; and such justice, upon hearing the complaint, shall determine what satisfaction shall be made to such employer by such apprenticed labourer, and in case such apprenticed labourer shall not give security to make such satisfaction according to such determination, it shall be lawful for such justice to commit such apprenticed labourer to the common gaol of the Island, for any term, not exceeding twelve months, with hard labour, or, until he shall make satisfaction as aforesaid.

107. And be it enacted, that nothing in this Act contained doth or shall extend to exempt any apprenticed labourer from, but that every apprenticed labourer shall be subject to the operation of any law or police regulation, which is or shall be in force in this Colony, for the prevention or punishment of any offence, such law or police regulation being in force against and applicable to all other persons of free condition.

108. And be it enacted, that for the purposes of this present Act, the word employer shall be deemed to comprehend, and be a sufficient legal description of the person having the the chief superintendence for the time being of the labour of any apprenticed labourers, whether such person having the superintendence for the time being as aforesaid, shall be the master, agent, attorney, manager, overseer or director of such apprenticed labourers.

109. And be it enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to abridge the labour hitherto performed by mariners, tradesmen, domestics, and other non-prædial apprenticed labourers.

110. And be it enacted, that wherever words are used in this Act importing the singular number, or the masculine gender only, it shall be understood to include several matters as well as one matter, and several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

111. And be it enacted, that within the meaning, and for the purposes of this Act, every person who for the time being shall be in the lawful administration of the government of this Colony shall be taken to be the Governor thereof.

112. And be it enacted, that within the meaning, and for the purposes of this Act, all islands and territories dependent upon this Island of Grenada, and within any part of the Government thereof, shall respectively be taken to be parts of this Colony.

113. And be it enacted, that if any person or persons whosoever shall wilfully swear falsely, touching any of the matters or things required by this Act, every such person or persons shall and may be prosecuted by indictment in the Supreme Court of Judicature of this Colony, and upon conviction, shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury, and shall suffer all the pains and penalties directed by any laws in force in the Colony, to be inflicted upon persons found guilty or convicted of the crime of wilful and corrupt perjury.

114. And be it enacted, that in default of payment of any fine imposed upon any employer by this Act, the same shall be recovered and levied on the goods and chattels of the defaulter by warrant of distress, under the hand and seal of the special justice of the district in which such fine may be incurred, and when not otherwise directed, shall be paid into the public treasury for the use of the Colony.

115. And be it enacted, that in all Act or Acts now in force in this Colony, wherein the services of persons hitherto denominated slaves are rendered available to public uses, such services shall, and the same are hereby declared to apply to, and shall and may be required to be performed by such persons when they shall have become apprenticed labourers.

116. And be it enacted, that a certain statute made in the 52d year of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain Acts, and amend other Acts, relating to religious Worship and Assemblies, and Persons teaching or preaching therein," shall be and is hereby declared to be in force in this Island: provided, nevertheless, that any two or more special justices shall have, exercise and enjoy all and every the jurisdiction, powers and authorities whatsoever, which by force and virtue of the said Act are within the realm of England, had exercised and enjoyed by the several justices of the peace, and by the general and quarter sessions therein mentioned.

117. And be it enacted, that this Act may be altered or varied, amended or explained by any other Act or Acts to be passed this session.

No. 48.

Grenada.

AN ACT to alter and amend an Act, intituled, "An Act for carrying into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies," and to make further provision for the purposes in the said Act mentioned.—(Passed 1st August 1834.)

Preamble. Island of Grenada to be divided into three grand divisions instead of six, and each grand division subdivided into three judicial districts.

WHEREAS it is necessary to alter and amend the Act passed on the 7th day of March last, for carrying into effect the provisions of the Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty, for the Abolition of Slavery, and to make further provision for the purposes in the said Act mentioned; Be it therefore enacted by his Excellency the Governor, the Council and Assembly of these Islands, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, That the Island of Grenada and its dependencies be divided into three grand divisions or districts, instead of six districts as in the said Act is provided, and that each of the said grand divisions or districts be subdivided into three judicial districts, in manner hereinafter mentioned.

Boundaries of grand divisions to be affixed by Governor, and altered by him from time to time as may be expedient.

2. And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the boundaries of the said grand divisions or districts, and of the said judicial districts shall be fixed and appointed by the Governor in Council, and shall and may be varied and altered by the said Governor in Council, from time to time as may be found expedient.

Lawful for Governor to appoint special justices with same powers as those appointed by Act of Parliament.

3. And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be lawful for the Governor, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to issue under the public seal of this Colony, one or more special commission or commissions to any person or persons constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for any of the said judicial districts, with the same powers and authorities as shall be contained in the commissions to be from time to time issued, under and by virtue of the 14th clause of the said recited Act of the Imperial Parliament, to the persons nominated by His Majesty to be justices for carrying into execution the laws for the abolition of slavery.

One stipendiary magistrate to preside over each grand division, and three or more special justices appointed to each judicial

4. And be it enacted, that a stipendiary justice shall preside over each of the said grand divisions, and that in each judicial district there shall be three or more special justices commissioned as aforesaid, and that within each grand division there shall be established a police,

AN ACT to amend an Act, intituled, "An Act for carrying into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies," and to make further provision for the purposes in the said Act mentioned.—(Passed 29th December 1834.)

WHEREAS it is necessary to amend the Act passed on the 11th day of March last, intituled, "An Act for carrying into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies," and to make further provision for the purposes in the said Act mentioned; Be it therefore enacted by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, the Council and Assembly of these Islands, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same, That the 47th, 48th, 64th, 65th, 66th, 70th, 78th and 98th clauses of an Act passed upon the 11th day of March last, intituled, "An Act for carrying into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies," shall be and the same are hereby declared to be all and severally repealed.

Preamble.

2. And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that every employer of apprenticed labourers attached to or worked upon any plantation or estate, or his attorney, agent or representative, shall allow to each and every such apprenticed labourer a sufficient portion of land adapted to the growth of provisions for his support and maintenance; and between the 1st day of January and the 31st day of December in each and every year, shall allow to each and every such apprenticed labourer 26 full working days over and above the time allotted by the 51st clause of the said Act passed upon the 11th day of March last, for the purpose of cultivating the same, at the discretion of the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or his agent or representative, and as to him may be deemed most advantageous and beneficial to such apprenticed labourers; provided that in all cases where it shall be found inconvenient for such employer of apprenticed labourers, to allow such portion of land for the purpose aforesaid, he shall, by some other ways and means, make ample provision for such apprenticed labourers in lieu thereof; and that every employer of such apprenticed labourers shall provide for and allow to every family, consisting of four or more apprenticed labourers, a good and comfortable house, with one or more cabannes or beds, raised at least one foot from the ground, and shall provide and give to each and every such apprenticed labourer a sufficient allowance weekly of salt and salt fish, or of such other food as their ages and state of health may require, and shall provide and give to each and every such apprenticed labourer sufficient clothing and blankets, suitable to their respective sexes, ages and conditions; and that every employer of apprenticed labourers not attached to nor worked upon any plantation or estate, shall provide for and furnish such apprenticed labourers with comfortable lodgings, sufficient food and decent clothing; and if any employer of apprenticed labourers shall neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions hereinbefore specified, every person so offending shall, on conviction before any stipendiary or special justice, forfeit and pay the sum of 10*l.* for every neglect or refusal: provided also, that every apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall be allowed Christmas and New Year's days as holidays.

3. And be it enacted, that on complaint from any apprenticed labourer or labourers, or upon the information or complaint of any other person or persons, or the fact coming to the knowledge of any stipendiary or special justice in any other manner, that the provisions hereinbefore contained for the maintenance and support of such apprenticed labourer or labourers, according to the true intent and meaning of this Act, have not been complied with, it shall and may be lawful to and for such stipendiary or special justice, and he is hereby required to proceed to the plantation, estate or place whereon such apprenticed labourer or labourers is or are resiedent or attached, or to cause and command such apprenticed labourer or labourers, or such other person or persons as such stipendiary or special justice may deem necessary to be examined in the premises, to appear before him, and such stipendiary or special justice shall and may inquire into such complaint, and if necessary, shall and may inspect the grounds, clothing and lodging of such apprenticed labourer or labourers, and shall and may examine into their general treatment, and for the more effectual discovery of the truth, it shall and may be lawful for such stipendiary or special justice on such inquiry to administer to such person or persons the following oath, viz.:

"I., A. B,. will true answer make to all such questions as shall be put to me touching the clothing, feeding, maintenance and general treatment of the apprenticed labourers, upon or belonging to the estate of or to
So help me God."

And if any person shall refuse to be sworn, or when sworn, shall refuse to answer such questions as shall be put to him relative to such complaint or inquiry, he shall forfeit the sum or 50*l.*; and if it shall appear on such complaint or inquiry to the said stipendiary or special justice, that any offence hath been committed against the provisions hereinbefore contained for the maintenance and support of such apprenticed labourers, then and in such case he is hereby authorized and strictly required to afford redress to such apprenticed labourer or labourers without delay, in manner and to the extent hereinafter specified; that is to say, to each apprenticed labourer attached to and worked upon any plantation or estate, one quarter of an acre of land, or a weekly allowance in money of 4*s.* 6*d.* currency, in lieu thereof, a weekly allowance of one quarter of a pint of salt, and two pounds of salt fish, or such other provisions as may be equivalent thereto, an annual allowance of clothing as follows: one pennistone or cloth jacket, and three yards of cloth or pennistone, or six yards of cloth or pennistone, eight yards of osnaburghs or other linen of equal strength or value, one hat, with needles and thread, and a triennial allowance of one blanket; and to each apprenticed labourer not attached to, nor worked upon any plantation or estate, a weekly allowance in money, or provisions equivalent thereto, to the value of 6*s.* currency, and an annual allowance of two suits of clothing; and such stipendiary or special justice is hereby authorized and empowered to issue an order under his hand, requiring such employer of apprenticed labourers to provide, furnish and give the allowances hereinbefore immediately specified, or so much and such parts thereof as to the said stipendiary or special justice in his discretion may seem meet; and such employer, for every neglect or refusal to comply with and obey such order, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 100*l.* current money of the said Island.

4. And be it enacted, that in case the portion of land allotted to any apprenticed labourer by his employer shall be situated at a distance exceeding three miles beyond the dwelling of such apprenticed labourer, and such apprenticed labourer shall complain of the hardship or inconvenience thereof to any stipendiary or special justice, he shall thereupon make such order as shall be just, so that a sufficient quantity of land at a reasonable distance, or ample provision in lieu thereof, be allowed to such apprenticed labourer.

5. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any employer of any apprenticed labourer to substitute money for the allowances of food hereinbefore provided, or any part thereof, at the marketable value of such allowances of food at the time of such substitution.

6. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any stipendiary or special justice to call for and inspect the hospital book, required to be kept by the 53d clause of the said Act passed on the 11th day of March last, at any time he may think fit, and if any person, who ought to produce such hospital book, shall neglect, omit or refuse to do so when required, he shall incur a penalty of 5*l.* for every such neglect, omission or refusal.

7. And be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful to detain in any hospital any apprenticed labourer who may have obtained from the medical attendant permission to depart therefrom.

8. And

8. And be it enacted, that the words "legal and lawful" mentioned and contained in the 55th clause of the said Act passed on the 11th day of March last, shall be read and considered as the word "reasonable," which is hereby substituted in lieu thereof.

9. And be it enacted, that so much of the 58th clause of the said Act passed on the 11th day of March last, as imposes any penalty or punishment upon any apprenticed labourer for endangering, or injuring, or exposing to damage or injury any property not belonging to his employer, or for neglecting or ill-using any cattle or other live stock not belonging to his employer, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

10. And be it enacted, that nothing in the said Act passed on the 11th day of March last, shall prevent or be construed to prevent any apprenticed labourer from preferring or resorting to prefer any complaint to the Governor, respecting any grievance, matter or thing not cognizable by any stipendiary or special justice, or from complaining or resorting to complain to the Governor against the decision of any stipendiary or special justice: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for any gang of apprenticed labourers, or any larger number thereof than the number allowed by the 63d clause of the said Act passed on the 11th day of March last, to leave the estate to which they are attached, for the purpose of preferring any such complaint, and all the provisions of the said 63d clause relating to, and regulating the resort and returns of apprenticed labourers to and from a special justice, for the purpose of making any complaint, and the penalty thereby imposed for obstructing any apprenticed labourer therein, shall be and the same are hereby declared to extend to cases where any apprenticed labourers shall be desirous of complaining to the Governor.

11. And be it enacted, that all contracts between any employer and apprenticed labourers for any taskwork or extra service, for any period exceeding five days, shall be entered by the employer or his agent in a book, to be kept for that purpose, upon the plantation to which such apprenticed labourer is attached, and upon complaint made to any stipendiary or special justice by any apprenticed labourer who shall have entered into the same, such stipendiary or special justice shall be and he is hereby authorized to inquire whether the terms of any such contract were distinctly understood by such apprenticed labourer, and whether he entered into it freely and voluntarily, and whether the same is reasonable and just, and such stipendiary or special justice shall make such adjudication in the matter as the justice of the case may require.

12. And be it enacted, that so much of the 76th clause of the said Act passed on the 11th day of March last, as authorizes any justice of the peace to adjudge, decide or determine, on of or concerning any offence within the same clause, shall be and the same is hereby repealed and the authority to adjudge, decide and determine on of and concerning such offence, is hereby vested in any two or more special justices.

13. And be it enacted, that every prædial apprenticed labourer found during the hours of work appointed by law, beyond the limits of the estate to which such apprenticed labourer may be attached, and not having with him a written pass for the purpose from his employer, or from some special justice, shall be liable to be apprehended and brought before a special justice, and unless such labourer shall explain the cause of his absence, or make sufficient excuse for the same to the satisfaction of such special justice, such labourer shall be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly.

14. And be it enacted, that when any apprenticed labourer shall be desirous of purchasing the remaining period of his apprenticeship, and his employer shall, after due notice, neglect or refuse to appoint an appraiser, to estimate the value of the services of such apprenticed labourer for the remaining period of his apprenticeship, pursuant to the provisions of the 93d clause of the said Act, passed on the 11th day of March last, it shall be lawful for the special justice to nominate both the appraisers, who shall act in the matter of such appraisement in the manner pointed out by the said clause of the said Act; and in order to provide for the discharge of apprenticed labourers desiring to obtain the same by purchase, in cases where the employers of such apprenticed labourers may be unable to contract for such discharge, it is hereby enacted, that if the employer of any apprenticed labourer, or any person having any interest in any such apprenticed labourer, shall by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease or charge upon or interest in such apprenticed labourer, being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer, or if the employer, or any other person having a charge upon or interest in any such apprenticed labourer shall be a minor or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or if the real employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall be absent from Grenada, and shall be unrepresented therein, or shall not be known, or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in the said Island wherein the right to the service of such apprenticed labourer shall or may be in controversy, then and in each and every of the cases aforesaid, the chief justice of the said Island, on application to him for that purpose made by any special justice, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer of such apprenticed labourer to appear before him at some convenient time and place, to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published in the public Gazette of the said Island of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid; and in such notice all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, either in their own right or as the agents, guardians, attorneys, trustees or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claims.

15. And be it enacted, that at the time appointed for any such meeting as aforesaid, the chief justice of the said Island, in the presence of the said special justice, and also in the presence of the employer of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer shall proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged by the said special justice, and by the employer or other person claiming any interest in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, and attending in pursuance of any such notice; and in case it shall be made to appear to the said chief justice that a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer cannot legally be effected by private contract, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer is absent from the said Island, and is unrepresented therein, or is unknown, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice in the said Island wherein the right to the services of such apprenticed labourer is in controversy, then and in every such case the said chief justice shall require the special justice and the employer of such apprenticed labourer, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of his or her services for the remainder of such apprenticeship, and the said chief justice shall himself nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer, being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or attending shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said chief justice shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such employer.

16. And be it enacted, that the appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid, shall be duly sworn by and before the said chief justice to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the value of the services of the apprenticed labourer so proposed to be discharged; and within seven days next after such their appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the said services, and shall certify such their valuation to the said chief justice under their hands and seals, and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said chief justice within the said term of seven days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall, within the next succeeding seven days, certify his valuation to the said chief justice; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers or in their default by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be filed or enrolled among the proceedings of the Supreme Court of Judicature.

17. Provided nevertheless, and be it enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the said chief justice within one calendar month next after such valuation shall have been made, that in the making thereof the said appraisers or umpire, or any of them, acted fraudulently or unjustly, or under the influence of any improper motive, or under any mistake as to the nature of their or his duty, or under any misapprehension of any material matter of fact, then, but not otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said chief justice to set aside the said valuation and to declare the same to be void, and to direct another valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, for which purpose new appraisers and a new umpire shall in manner aforesaid be appointed and sworn, and shall proceed to make a second valuation, which being certified to the said chief justice in manner aforesaid, shall be to all intents and purposes binding and conclusive; provided that such second or any subsequent valuation may in like manner be set aside by any such chief justice on the grounds aforesaid, until a valuation is made not open to any such objection: provided also, that if the amount of any such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned within three calendar months next after the filing or enrolment thereof, such filing or enrolment shall be cancelled.

18. And be it enacted, that upon or within three calendar months next after the filing or enrolment in the said Supreme Court of Judicature of any such valuation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any special justice as aforesaid out of any monies to be supplied to him for that purpose by the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, to pay to the public treasurer of the said Island the appraised value of the services of such apprenticed labourer, taking a receipt in writing from such treasurer for every such payment; and the said chief justice shall, upon application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice, make an order for the filing or enrolment in the said Supreme Court of Judicature of such receipt, and the said chief justice shall by such order further proceed to declare and adjudge that the apprenticed labourer, by or on behalf of whom such money hath been paid, is discharged, and such apprenticed labourer shall thereupon be and be deemed, taken and reputed to be discharged to all intents and purposes from such apprenticeship.

19. And be it enacted, that the money to arise from the discharge of any apprenticed labourer by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned, shall remain in the hands of the public treasurer of the said Island, and shall bear interest at and after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum; and His Majesty's Colonial Revenue in the said Island shall be and is hereby declared to be pledged and responsible for the due payment of such principal money and interest; or shall, in the discretion of such public treasurer, be invested in the purchase, in his name, of any public funds or securities of Great Britain and Ireland; and the Chief Justice of the said Island shall and he is hereby authorized upon application to him for that purpose made, to direct that the money in the hands of the said public treasurer, and the interest accruing on such money, or the public funds of Great Britain and Ireland so to be purchased as aforesaid, and the dividends payable thereupon, shall be the property property of the person or persons who was or were entitled to the services of such discharged apprenticed labourers, and shall be subject and liable to all such and the same uses, trusts, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands of what nature or kind soever, as such services were subject unto at such time of the discharge of such apprenticed labourer; and the said public treasurer shall hold the said money and the interest accruing therefrom, or the said public funds and dividends, subject to such order as such chief justice of the said Island may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, and upon notice to all other persons interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make, and such principal money and interest shall by such public treasurer be paid and disposed of in pursuance of and in obedience to any such order.

20. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the chief justice of the said Island to make and prescribe, and from time to time to revoke and alter as occasion may require, all such rules and orders as may be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction hereby in him vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to or interested in any question so depending before him.

21. And be it enacted, that in case of the death, suspension or absence from the said Island of the said chief justice thereof, or in case of his having any right or interest in or to the services of any apprenticed labourer desirous to purchase the remaining period of his apprenticeship, all and every the powers, duties and authorities hereby vested in and directed to be performed by the said chief justice, shall in every such case devolve upon and be exercised by the senior assistant justice of the said Supreme Court of Judicature; provided that he, the said senior assistant justice, shall not have any right, title or interest in or to the services of the apprenticed labourer or labourers desiring to purchase his, her or their remaining period of apprenticeship, either of himself or as agent or attorney of any party having such right, title or interest, or then and in such case of his being so interested, the same duties and authorities shall devolve upon the next senior assistant justice not having any right, title or interest as aforesaid in the services of such apprenticed labourer.

22. And be it enacted, that so much of the 103d clause of the said Act, passed upon the 11th day of March last, as authorizes the employer of apprenticed labourers to nominate such apprenticed labourers to or for the office of constables or policemen, shall be and the same is hereby repealed: And it is hereby enacted, that it shall be lawful for any special justice to appoint constables on any plantation from amongst the most respectable apprenticed labourers, which constables shall have (with reference to other apprenticed labourers) the same powers as ordinary constables, and shall and they are hereby authorized and empowered to take into custody any apprenticed labourer who shall have committed any offence against the provisions of the said Act passed on the 11th day of March last, or of this Act, and who it is presumed will attempt to escape.

23. And be it enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or compellable to yield any extra service or compensation of any description to his employer after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such labourer.

24. And be it enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall during his own time be liable to perform any service required by the 115th clause of the said Act passed upon the 11th day of March last.

AN ACT to carry into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves."—(Passed 2 May 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS by an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," passed on or about the 28th day of August now last past, it is amongst other things enacted, that all persons who, on the 1st day of August, in the present year 1834, shall have been registered as slaves in any such Colony, and shall be actually within any such Colony, and shall appear on the register to be six years old and upwards, shall, by force and virtue of the said Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship or other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers: And whereas by the said Act it is declared to be necessary that certain rules and regulations should be established for giving effect to the provisions of the said Act: And whereas it is desirable that such rules and regulations as are necessary for giving effect to the provisions of the said Act, as far as they relate to the internal concerns of this Colony, should be enacted by the Legislature thereof: We therefore, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, his Excellency Major-General Henry Charles Darling, Lieutenant-Governor in and over the Island of Tobago and its dependencies, the Council and General Assembly of the same, do humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the said Lieutenant-Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the said Council and General Assembly in Session assembled, and by the authority of the same, that, subject to the obligations imposed by this Act, all persons who on the 1st day of August next ensuing shall be holden in slavery within this Colony, shall upon and from and after the said 1st day of August next ensuing, become and be, to all intents and purposes, free and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted; and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children shall, in like manner, be free from their birth; and that from and after the said 1st day of August next ensuing, slavery shall be and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished and declared unlawful in this Colony: Provided also, and be it further enacted, that all slaves who may at any time previous to the passing of this Act have been brought with the consent of their possessors, and all apprenticed labourers who may hereafter, with the like consent, be brought into any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, shall, from and after the passing of this Act, be absolutely and entirely free to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

Subject to obligations imposed hereby, all slaves in this Island emancipated from 1st August next, from which time slavery shall be abolished in this Island.

All slaves brought into the United Kingdom, with consent of possessors, free after passing of this Act.

2. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no person who by force and virtue of the said recited Act of the Imperial Parliament shall become a prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1840, and that during such his or her apprenticeship no such prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall be bound or liable by virtue of such apprenticeship (except in such cases as are hereinafter excepted) to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week.

Apprenticeship of prædial labourers not to continue beyond 1st August 1840.

3. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no person who by virtue of the said Act shall become a non-prædial apprenticed labourer, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1838.

Of non-prædial labourers not beyond 1st August 1838.

4. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if, before the term of any such apprenticeship shall have expired, the person or persons entitled, for and during the remainder of any such term, to the services of such apprenticed labourer, shall be desirous to discharge him or her from such apprenticeship, it shall be lawful for such person or persons so to do, by any deed or instrument to be by him, her or them for that purpose made and executed, which deed or instrument shall be duly executed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, and recorded in the register's office of the said Island: Provided nevertheless, that no employer having a partial or temporary interest in any apprenticed labourer, may, to the extent of such interest, effect his or her discharge or release gratuitously, unless all other persons having a partial, future or reversionary interest in such apprenticed labourer, shall consent to be parties to such discharge or release, or unless such partial, future or reversionary interest shall be purchased in the manner and according to the rules and regulations hereinafter established for the purchase, by any apprenticed labourer, of his or her discharge, against the will of his or her employer: And provided also, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship by any voluntary act as aforesaid, shall be at that time of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any such disease or mental or bodily infirmity, as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom.

Before apprenticeship is expired, labourer may be discharged by voluntary act of employer.

In case of voluntary discharge of aged or infirm apprentice, employer to continue liable for support.

5. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for any such apprenticed labourer to purchase his or her discharge from such apprenticeship, even without the consent, or in opposition, if necessary, to the will of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, upon payment to such person or persons of the value of such services, to be appraised in manner hereafter mentioned; and if the person or persons entitled to or having an interest in the service of any such apprenticed labourer, shall, upon due application made to him or them for that purpose, and tender of payment of the value of such services, be unwilling or refuse to execute such discharge as aforesaid, or shall, by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease, or charge upon, or interest in such service, being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge, or if the person entitled as aforesaid shall be a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic, or shall be absent from the Island, or shall not be known, or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in this Island, wherein the right to the services of such apprenticed labourer shall or may be in controversy, or if the person or persons entitled to the service of any such apprenticed labourer shall demand as the price of such discharge a greater sum of money than may appear to the special justice of the district in which such apprenticed labourer may reside, to be the fair and just value thereof, then and in each and every of the cases aforesaid, the chief or senior assistant justice of the Court of Common Pleas of the said Island, on application to him made for that purpose

Apprentice may purchase discharge against the will of his employer on an appraisement.

If person entitled to services unwilling or refuse to execute discharge or be incapable of doing so;

Justices of Court of Common Pleas on application to them made, purpose by such special justice, shall issue a summons, under his hand and seal, requiring the person or persons entitled to such service, or their agents or representatives, to appear before the justices of the said court in chambers, at such time as shall be in such summons appointed; and the justices of the said court, or so many of them as shall be resident in the said Island, and able to attend, shall, in the presence of such special justice and the person or persons entitled to such service, or upon proof being made to them of the due service of such summons, then, if necessary, in the absence of such person or persons, shall proceed to hear, in a summary way, what may be alleged by such of the said parties as may attend; and in case the person or persons entitled to such service shall refuse to execute such discharge at a price approved of by the said court, or in case it shall be made to appear to the said court that a valid discharge cannot be effected by private contract, or that the person entitled to or having an interest in such services is a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic, or is absent from the Colony, or is unknown, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice of this Island, wherein the right to the services, of such apprenticed labourer is in controversy, then and in every such case the said court shall order and direct such special justice and the person or persons entitled to such service, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of the service of such apprenticed labourer, and the court shall nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such special justice, or the person or persons entitled to such service, being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or attending, shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said chief justice or senior assistant justice shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such special justice, or of such person or persons entitled to such service as aforesaid.

to summon parties to appear at chambers, and to proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged;

and to order special justice and person entitled to service of apprentice each to nominate an appraiser.

Court to nominate umpire.

6. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid, shall be duly sworn before the said court to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the services of such apprenticed labourer so proposed to be discharged, and within ten days next after such their appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation thereof, and shall certify such their valuation to the said court, under their hands and seals; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered within the term aforesaid, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall, within ten days next thereafter, certify his valuation to the said court, and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or, in their default, by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive upon the said respective parties; and the said court shall thereupon order and direct such special justice to make and execute a discharge of such apprenticed labourer, in manner before directed, upon payment, nevertheless, by the said apprenticed labourer of such appraised value of his services, and such discharge shall be duly recorded in the register's office of the said Island.

Appraisers to be sworn and to make valuation within ten days, and to certify to court.

If no certificate made within that time, umpire to be sworn, and to certify valuation.

Valuation to be binding and conclusive.

Court thereupon to order special justice to execute discharge.

7. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the appraised value of the services of such apprenticed labourer, by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned, shall be paid into the hands of the public treasurer of the said Island, and shall be the property of the person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer, subject, nevertheless, to all such and the same uses, trusts, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands of what nature or kind soever, as such apprenticed labourer himself would have been held upon, under or subject unto, had this Act not been passed; and the said treasurer shall hold the said money, subject to such order as the said court may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, and upon notice to all other persons interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make; and such money shall, by the said treasurer, be paid and disposed of in pursuance of and in obedience to any such order.

Approved value to be paid into the hands of the public treasurer.

8. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for the said court to make and prescribe, and from time to time to revoke and alter, as occasion may require, such rules and orders as may be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction in them hereby vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to or interested in any question so depending before them; and the said court shall also establish a moderate and reasonable docket of fees and expenses to be paid and incurred in making such appraisements as aforesaid, which shall in no case exceed in the whole the sum of 5 l.; and any appraiser or other person who shall demand or receive for any services by him or her rendered in or about any such appraisement, any greater or other fee, sum of money, advantage or emolument whatsoever than such as shall be authorized by such docket, shall incur a penalty of not less than 10 l., nor more than 30 l., in addition to the amount of any such unlawful fee, sum of money, advantage or emolument so received; which fine shall be received by warrant under the hand and seal of the chief or senior assistant justice of the said court, directed to the provost marshal, or his lawful deputy, in the nature of an execution issuing out of the Court of Common Pleas, upon judgment obtained therein.

Court to make rules for regulating proceedings on appraisement; and establish docket of fees.

Appraiser demanding or receiving greater or other fee than authorized, to incur a penalty.

9. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any such appraisement as aforesaid shall have been rendered necessary by any difference of opinion between such apprenticed labourer and the person or persons entitled to his services, respecting the price to be paid for his discharge, the expense of such appraisement shall be borne by the apprentice, and be added to the amount of the valuation, if the services of such apprentice shall be appraised at a sum exceeding or equal to the price demanded by the person or persons entitled thereto; but if the appraised value of such service shall be less than

If services of apprentice appraised at a sum exceeding or equal to sum demanded, apprentice to pay expense of appraisement.

If less, then by person nntitled to service. If appraisement rendered necessary by any other cause than difference of opinion as to price, expense to be equally divided.

than the price previously demanded by the person or persons entitled thereto, then the expense of such appraisement shall be wholly borne and defrayed by such person or persons; and in case any such appraisement shall have been rendered necessary by any other cause than a difference of opinion as to the price to be paid for the value of such service, the expense of the appraisement shall be equally divided between such apprenticed labourer and the person or persons entitled to his services.

Recital of Allowances now given to slaves.

10. And whereas by the laws now in force in this Island, every owner, renter or possessor of slaves, belonging to or worked upon any plantation or estate, is required to provide for and allow to every family of slaves a good and comfortable house, and to provide and give to each and every such slave, according to their age, sex and condition, over and above the portion of land now by law prescribed, a weekly allowance of two pounds of salt fish, or such other provisions as may be equivalent thereto, or such other food as their ages and state of health may require, and to provide and give to each and every such slave an annual allowance of clothing, as follows; viz. six yards of cloth or pennistone, six yards of osnaburgh or other linen of equal strength or value, one hat, and a triennial allowance of one blanket; and to each slave not attached to or worked upon any plantation or estate, a weekly allowance in money or provisions equivalent to the value of two shillings sterling, and an annual allowance of one suit of clothing: And whereas it is desirable that the said respective allowances should be continued to the persons hereafter to become apprenticed labourers; Be it therefore, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that during the continuance of such apprenticeship as aforesaid, the person or persons for the time being entitled to the services of every such apprenticed labourer shall be, and is and are hereby required to supply him or her with the respective allowances of food, clothing and lodging, to the amount and of the kinds before enumerated and set forth, according to the respective age, sex and condition of such apprenticed labourer.

Portion of land to prædial apprentices to be increased.

11. And whereas it is desirable to increase the portion of land now by law allowed to slaves in this Island, and hereafter to be allotted to apprenticed labourers; Be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every person in this Island entitled to the service of any prædial apprenticed labourer, or his or her attorney, agent or representative, shall be and they are hereby bound and required, from and after the first day of August now next ensuing, to set apart for every such prædial apprenticed labourer, being of the age of twelve years and upwards, half an acre of land, properly adapted for the growth of provisions, and not more then three miles distant from the place of residence of such labourer; and in respect of every prædial apprenticed labourer under the said age, every such person, or his or her attorney, agent or representative, shall be and they are hereby bound and required to set apart for the father or reputed father or mother of every such infant labourer, one quarter of an acre of like ground, or if such infant labourer shall have no parent in the service of the said employer, then such quarter of an acre shall be set apart for some other apprenticed labourer, who shall be charged with the cultivation of the same for the benefit of such infant, and for the proper cultivation of such ground; and for the raising and securing the crops grown thereon, every apprenticed labourer shall, between the first day of July and the first day of December in each and every year during the term of such apprenticeship, be entitled to fourteen full working days from and out of the five-and-forty weekly working hours hereinbefore mentioned.

Apprentices of the age of twelve years and upwards to have half an acre of land, and not more than three miles distance from place of residence; under that age, quarter of an acre.

Between 1 July and 1 December in each year, to be entitled to 14 full working days for cultivation thereof.

Where persons shall not have sufficient land, or shall prefer maintaining their apprentices, what allowances to be given.

12. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in all cases where the person or persons entitled to the services of such prædial apprenticed labourers shall not have sufficient land adapted for the growth of provisions, or shall prefer maintaining his, her or their said apprentices by an allowance of provisions, he, she or they shall, in lieu of the allowance of land and time aforesaid, supply to each such apprenticed labourer above the age of ten years, a weekly allowance of seven quarts of corn-meal, or five quarts of rice or flour, or twenty pounds of yams, or twenty-five pounds of sweet potatoes, or thirty pounds of full-grown plantains; and every prædial apprenticed labourer below the age of ten years shall be supplied with one-half of the before-mentioned allowance in each week, which allowance shall be delivered to the mother or guardian of every such infant apprentice.

All provisions supplied to be sound and fit for consumption, and delivered on corresponding day in each week.

13. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all provisions to be supplied to such apprenticed labourers, shall be sound and fit for consumption, and of good average merchantable quality; and the said weekly allowance as aforesaid shall in no case be delivered on Sunday, but shall always be delivered on the corresponding day in each successive week, unless such delivery shall be delayed by accident or other unavoidable cause.

Not lawful to dispossess apprentice of land until crops are gathered.

14. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall not be lawful for any person whosoever to dispossess any such apprenticed labourer of any land to be cultivated by him or her, until such apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground; and the said crops, when growing upon any such ground, and when severed therefrom, shall be and are hereby declared to be the sole and absolute property of such apprenticed labourer for and in respect of whom such ground shall have been appropriated and set apart.

Apprentice may be compelled to cultivate his grounds.

15. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every apprenticed labourer, in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated and set apart, shall and may, by all lawful ways and means, but subject to the rules herein contained respecting the labour of such apprenticed labourers, be compelled by the person or persons entitled to, or in the the superintendence of his or her labour, to cultivate such grounds, and any such apprenticed labourer neglecting or refusing so to do, shall be liable to the said pains and penalties as are hereinafter provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him performed in the discharge of the services owing by him by law to such his employers.

Apprentice allowing his house or provision-grounds to fall into decay or bad order, how to be remedied.

16. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer shall by wilful neglect or indolence during his or her own time, suffer his or her house or provision-grounds to fall into decay and bad order, it shall and may be lawful for the employer of such apprenticed labourer, with the sanction in writing of any special justice to be obtained upon proof before him of such neglect or indolence, to put the house or provision-ground of such apprenticed labourer into proper order for his or her comfort or support, and to deduct an equivalent quantity of labour from his or her own time, not exceeding fifteen hours in any one week.

Neglect or refusal to supply allowances, &c. how punishable.

17. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons entitled to the services of, or in superintendence of the labour of such apprenticed labourer, shall wilfully neglect or refuse to supply such apprenticed labourers with such allowance of food, clothing, lodging, and such other maintenance and allowances as hereinbefore is required, or shall not set apart for every such apprenticed labourer, who is to be maintained by the cultivation of ground, such land, of such quantity and quality, and so situated as hereinbefore is required, or shall dispossess any such apprenticed labourer of any land so allotted to, and by him or her cultivated, before such apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground, or shall neglect or omit to allow to any such apprenticed labourer, for and in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated, such portion of time in each year as aforesaid for the cultivation thereof, every person so offending shall, for each and every such offence, incur a penalty of forty shillings of lawful money of Great Britain, for every apprenticed labourer not by him or them so provided as aforesaid; and every such neglect or refusal, dispossession or eviction, shall be deemed a misdemeanor; and in case either of the special justices, on complaint made to him or them, shall deem such complaint well founded, they or either of them shall direct the law officer of the Crown to prosecute the offender for such offence in the Court of King's Bench of this Island; and the judges of the said court may order such part of the penalty recovered, as they may think fit, to be paid to and for the use of the apprentice or apprentices complaining.

Penalty, how to be applied.

Special Justice, how to proceed on complaint of neglect or refusal to make proper allowances, &c. to apprentices.

18. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that on complaint of any apprenticed labourer, or upon the information or complaint of any other person or persons, that the provisions of this Act for the maintenance and support of such apprenticed labourer, have not been complied with, it shall and may be lawful to and for the special justice of the district in which such apprenticed labourer may reside, to cause and command such apprenticed labourer, or such other person or persons as such special justice may deem necessary, to be examined in the premises, to be and appear before him; and such special justice shall and may inquire into such complaint, and if necessary shall and may inspect the grounds, clothing and lodging of such apprenticed labourer, and if it shall appear on such complaint or inquiry that the provisions hereinbefore contained for the maintenance and support of such apprenticed labourer have not been complied with, then and in such case such special justice is hereby authorized and strictly required to afford redress to such apprenticed labourer without delay, and is hereby authorized and empowered to issue an order under his hand, requiring the person or persons entitled for the time being to the services of any such apprenticed labourer, to provide, furnish and give the allowances required, and hereinbefore specified, or so much and such parts thereof as to such justice in his discretion may seem meet; and every such person and persons refusing to comply with and obey such order, shall forfeit and pay a sum equivalent to twice the value of the purchase of the allowance so by him, her or them neglected or refused to be made to such apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom such justice's order shall issue, or equivalent to twice the amount of the loss sustained by such apprenticed labourer, by every such act, omission or neglect as aforesaid.

Power of inspection.

To make order on person entitled to services of apprentice.

Penalty for non-compliance with order.

Upon every estaate a proper hospital to be established.

19. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that upon every plantation or estate in this Island, to which apprenticed labourers are attached, there shall be a good and sufficient hospital, of proper size and dimensions, according to the number of apprenticed labourers on such plantation or estate, in a proper and healthy situation, for the reception and cure of all apprenticed labourers who shall complain of sickness, or meet with any accident or injury, or who shall or may, from any infirmity or other cause, require to be received therein; and the employer, manager or attorney, or person for the time being having the charge of such plantation and apprenticed labourers, are hereby respectively required and directed to keep a hospital-book, with the names of the apprenticed labourers so admitted, the dates of their admission, and also of their dismission or death; and in which book shall be inserted, by the medical attendant of the said plantation, the nature of their complaints or diseases, prescriptions and treatment.

Hospital-book to be kept, and medical attendant to enter nature of complaint, prescription and treatment.

Apprentice absenting himself for one hour, without reasonable cause, compelled to serve two.

Not to exceed 15 in the whole in any one week.

20. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service without reasonable cause, for the space of one hour, or any lesser period of time, he or she shall be compelled to serve double the time he or she shall so absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service: Provided always, that such extra time shall not exceed fifteen hours in the whole in any one week.

If more than seven hours and a half, to be punished by imprisonment, &c. not exceeding four days, or stripes not exceeding ten.

21. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service, without the consent of his or her employer, for more then seven hours and a half in any one week, he or she shall, upon conviction thereof before the special justice of the district in which such apprenticed labourer shall reside, be punished by sentence of imprisonment with hard labour, or solitary confinement for any time not exceeding four days, or to any number of stripes not exceeding ten, as such special justice in his discretion shall think the offence deserves; and any apprenticed labourer who shall in like manner absent himself or herself for more than two days in any one week, shall in like manner be punished by sentence of imprisonment with hard labour, or solitary confinement for any time not exceeding one week, or to any number of stripes not exceeding twenty, as such special justice shall in his discretion think the offence deserves; and any apprenticed labourer who shall in like manner absent himself or herself for more than six days in any one week, shall be punished by sentence of imprisonment with hard labour, or solitary confinement for any time not exceeding a fortnight, or to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty, as such special justice shall in like manner think the offence deserving.

If more than two days, by imprisonment, &c. not exceeding one week, or stripes not exceeding 20.
If more than six days, by imprisonment, &c. not exceeding a fortnight, or stripes not exceeding 30.

Apprenticed labourer convicted of performing work indolently, carelessly or negligently, how punishable.

22. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be convicted before any such special justice as aforesaid of performing his or her work indolently, carelessly or negligently, shall for the first offence be adjudged to labour in his or her employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week; for the second offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; and for the third or any subsequent offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding fourteen days, with or without whipping not exceeding twenty stripes.

Apprenticed labourer in a state of drunkenness, found fighting, or conducting himself or herself in an insolent or insubordinate manner, how punishable.

23. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself or herself in an insolent or insubordinate manner towards his or her employer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour, shall for every such offence be liable, upon conviction by such special justice as aforesaid, to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping not exceeding fifteen stripes.

Any labourer who by negligent or careless use of fire shall endanger property of employer, or wilfully ill use cattle, &c. or by negligence expose property of employer to damage, how punishable.

24. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any labourer who by the negligent or careless use of fire shall endanger the property of his or her employer, entrusted to his or her care, or shall wilfully ill use the cattle or other live stock of his or her employer, or who shall by negligence expose his or her employer's property to any damage or injury, and be convicted thereof before any such special jnstice as aforesaid, shall for each and every such offence be adjudged by such special justice of the peace either to extra labour in his or her employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty, or to any two or more of such punishments as any such special justice of the peace as aforesaid shall in his discretion think the nature of the offence may appear to require: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt any such labourer from his or her liability to any such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition would be subject and liable to in respect of any such acts by him or her done, committed or omitted; and provided also, that no such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to be so sued or prosecuted both under this Act and under such general laws as aforesaid.

Apprentice convicted of contumaciously disobeying lawful commands of employer, &c. how punishable.

25. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be convicted before any such special justice of having contumaciously disobeyed the lawful commands of his or her employer, or the person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour, shall, be liable to any one or more of the punishments in the preceding clause mentioned.

Apprentice appointed to watch by night wilfully neglecting or refusing to appear, or to continue on performance of such duty, how punishable.

26. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer appointed to watch by night by his employer, or by the person in charge of the plantation or estate to which such apprenticed labourer shall be attached, shall neglect or refuse to appear at such time and place as shall be appointed by his employer, or by the person in charge of the plantation or estate to which such apprenticed labourer shall be attached, for the performance of his said duty, or shall neglect or refuse to proceed and continue according to his directions and orders, in the regular and punctual performance of the said duty, every such apprenticed labourer so offending, who shall not prove to the satisfaction of the special justice of the district, that he was prevented by illness, or such other unavoidable accident as shall, in the judgment of the said special justice, be a sufficient excuse, shall, for every such offence, upon conviction before the said special justice, be sentenced to work for the benefit of his or her employer for three extra hours for each offence.

Apprentice sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour may be condemned to work on public roads, &c

27. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that whenever any apprenticed labourer shall be by such special justice condemned or adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour, it shall and may be lawful for such special justice to order and direct, if he shall so think proper, that the hard labour which such apprenticed labourer so condemned and adjudged shall be liable to perform, shall be in effectually mending and repairing, widening and cleaning of the public roads, highways and streets of and within the district to which they are

are required to labour or to which they belong; and for the purposes aforesaid, such apprenticed labourer shall be formed into a penal gang, to work at such times and in such manner as such special justice shall direct and appoint.

and be formed into a penal gang.

28. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no female apprenticed labourer within this Island shall be punished or corrected for any offence by her committed, by the flogging, whipping, scourging or beating her person; but that in all cases aforesaid, where the punishment of whipping is by this Act authorized, the same shall be understood as applying to the cases of males only, and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any male offender, shall, when committed by females, be punished by confinement to hard labour or by solitary confinement, to the extent as is hereinbefore provided for.

No female to be punished by whipping.

Offences committed by females, punishable by confinement to hard labour or by solitary confinement.

29. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that whenever by the sentence of any such special justice of the peace as aforesaid, it shall become necessary to punish any male apprenticed labourer by whipping, for any offence committed by him against the provisions of this Act, such punishment shall be inflicted on such offender with the like instrument and in like manner as is now used and practised in His Majesty's army.

Males punished by whipping, with the same instrument, and in like manner as in His Majesty's army.

30. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons in this Island entitled to or having an interest in the services of any apprenticed labourer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour, shall, upon any pretence whatever, take upon himself or herself to inflict or cause or knowingly suffer to be inflicted on any such apprenticed labourer, any punishment by the whipping, beating, imprisonment or confinement of his or her person, or any other punishment or correction whatever, or if any such person or persons shall wantonly or cruelly cut, wound, maim or mutilate, or keep in confinement any apprenticed labourer, he, she or they shall be liable to be prosecuted for each and every such offence as aforesaid, by indictment at any court of King's Bench to be holden for this Island, and upon conviction shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court before whom such offender shall be tried and convicted.

Any person inflicting any punishment on apprenticed labourer, how punishable.

31. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, that no prædial apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or bound to engage in or perform any agricultural or manufacturing labour in the said Island before the hour of six in the morning, or after the hour of six in the evening, but that, save as is hereinafter provided, all prædial apprenticed labourers shall be, and they are hereby declared to be entitled to an entire cessation and intermission of every description of work and labour from the hour of six on each evening until the hour of six in the next succeeding morning.

Hours of labour for prædial labourers.

32. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, that all prædial apprenticed labourers employed in any agricultural or manufacturing labour within the said Island shall be allowed and entitled to an entire intermission and cessation of work and labour from the hour of seven till the hour of eight in the morning, and from the hour of twelve till the hour of two in the afternoon of each and every day throughout the year, provided that the hours of intermission and cessation of labour in the case of prædial apprentices employed in any manufacturing labour may be allowed at any other period of the day, if an interval of not less than three nor more than six hours intervene between such remissions, and if the same be respectively of such duration as aforesaid.

Hours of cessation from labour.

33. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, that it shall be the duty of every such employer or person in the superintendence of the labour of any such apprenticed labourers in this Island, to intimate to the labourers in his employment the commencement and close of the hours of labour hereby established, for which purpose a signal shall be given; and such signal shall be of such a nature as to be distinctly visible or audible to the several prædial apprenticed labourers in the service of or under the superintendence of any such person or persons.

Employer to intimate by signal commencement and close of hours of labour.

34. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no apprenticed labourer within this Island shall be compelled or compellable to labour for the benefit, profit or advantage of his or her employer, or person in the superintendence of his or her labour, or of any person or persons whatsoever, on any Sunday throughout the year, except in work of necessity, or in domestic services, or in the protection of property, or in tending of cattle; nor shall any apprenticed labourer, except as aforesaid, be liable to be hindered or prevented from attending any where on Sundays for religious worship at his or her free will or pleasure, but shall be at full liberty so to do, without any let, denial or interruption whatsoever: provided always, that no description of agricultural labour shall be deemed a work of necessity within the meaning or for the purposes of this Act, unless such labour be undertaken to prevent or arrest or remedy the effects of any fire, flood, hurricane or tempest, or other such like casualty.

No labourer compelled to work on a Sunday, except in certain cases.

35. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if the employer of or person in the immediate superintendence of the labour of any prædial apprenticed labourer, shall, by force or fraud, protract the weekly services of such labourer beyond the period by this Act allowed for that purpose, he, she or they shall, upon conviction thereof before such special justice of the peace, forfeit and pay a fine of one shilling for every hour such service shall be protracted; which said fine shall be paid to such apprenticed labourer to and for his use and benefit.

Persons protracting, by force or fraud, weekly services, how punishable.

No labourer compelled to undertake task work without his own consent.

36. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no apprenticed labourer within this Island shall be bound to undertake any task work, except with his or her own free assent to the same, save as hereinafter is excepted.

How agreement for task work to be entered into.

37. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that whenever any agreement shall be entered into between any employer of, or person in the superintendence of the labour of any apprenticed labourer, and any prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any specific work as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour by such apprentice in extra hours, such contract shall be reduced into writing by such employer or other person, in the presence of one or more credible witness or witnesses, and entered in a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation in which such extra labour is to be performed, and which book shall be produced and shown to the special justice of the district, whenever he may give notice to the party in whose possession it may be to produce the same.

No contract to continue in force beyond 14 days, unless with consent of Special Justice.

38. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no contract between any such employer or other person and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance by him or her of any such specific or task work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure or continue in force or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of fourteen days from the making thereof, unless such contract shall have been made and entered into by such parties in the presence and with the approbation of such special justice of the peace, or unless having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved of by him before the expiration of such fourteen days, and every such approbation of any such contract shall by such special justice be attested under his hand in the book so to be kept as aforesaid: provided always, that it shall be the duty of such special justice, before approving of any such contract, to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourer entering into the same, and that the same had been entered into with his or her free will and consent.

Special Justice approving of contract, to ascertain terms understood by labourer.

In contracts beyond 14 days, terms to be distinctly expressed and set forth.

No contract to continue in force beyond one year.

39. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in every such contract for task work, or for extra service extending beyond the period of fourteen days, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed and set forth: provided always, that no contract for such extra service as aforesaid shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

If majority of prædial labourers enter into contract for extra labour, special justice may compel the minority to join in the same.

40. And whereas it may be necessary in certain cases to provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate, in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers, of any task work or extra labour which the majority of such labourers shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake; Be it therefore, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that whenever the majority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate in this Island shall, with the approbation of such special justice as aforesaid, have entered into any contract with their employer, or person in superintendence of their labour, for the performance of any extra labour or task work, it shall and may be lawful for the said special justice, if required so to do, to order and direct the minority of the said apprenticed labourers to join in and perform such extra labour or task work; and if any such apprenticed labourer shall neglect or refuse to obey such order as aforesaid, he, she or they shall, upon conviction before the said special justice, be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him or her performed in the discharge of the services owing by him or her by law to such his or her employer.

Upon proof of non-payment by employer of hire, special justice to order the same to be paid within a certain period, and if not paid to issue his warrant to levy the same.

41. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that upon proof being made to the satisfaction of such special justice of the non-payment by such employer or other person of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task work or for extra services, it shall and may be competent for such special justice thereupon to order and direct the same to be paid within a certain period to be by him named for that purpose; aad if the same shall not be paid at the time so named, then it shall and may be lawful for the said special justice to issue a warrant for levying the same, under his hand and seal, in the nature of an execution issuing out of the court of Common Pleas of the said Island, and directed to the provost-marshal or his lawful deputy, who is hereby authorized and required to execute the same at any time of the year, and shall take and receive the same fees thereon as on executions issuing out of the said court.

Apprentice violating terms of contract for task work, how punishable.

42. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer who shall violate the terms of such contract as aforesaid for task work or for extra service, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him or her performed in the discharge of the services owing by him or her by law to his or her employer.

Married woman and infant competent to enter into contracts.

43. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of twelve years and upwards, notwithstanding his or her infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid for task work or for extra service.

44. And

Island to be divided in two or more districts, and one Special Justice to be appointed to each district.

44. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that this Island shall for the purposes of this Act, be divided into two or more districts, the respective extents and limits whereof shall be fixed by the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council of the same, and the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island shall appoint to each of the said districts one of the special justices to be constituted under and by virtue of the said recited Act of the Imperial Parliament, which said special justice shall reside within the district to which he shall be appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed of by the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island.

Special justice required to sit twice in each week, to hear complaints.

45. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that such special justices shall and they are hereby required to attend and sit at their usual residences, or at some other convenient place within their said district, to be for that purpose named and appointed, at least twice in each and every week throughout the year or oftener if need be, in order to hear, investigate and determine all cases, causes and complaints that may be preferred to them; and such special justices shall cause all necessary parties to attend before them by virtue of such process, and shall proceed to hear, investigate and determine in a summary manner all such causes and complaints, according to such and the like modes of proceeding as are adopted for the investigation of criminal matters by His Majesty's justices of the peace in England.

Special Justice to keep a journal of all cases, &c. brought before him.

46. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every such special justice shall keep a journal of all cases, causes and complaints brought before him, in which he shall respectively enter the date of the complaint, the name of the complainant, the substance of the complaint, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side, the substance of the evidence, the decision of the case, whether the decision has been carried into effect, and any general remarks which he may think desirable, which said journal shall be kept in one uniform manner to be prescribed for that purpose by the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island.

Special Justice, at the expiration of every quarter to transmit a duplicate of his journal to Government, with an affidavit that the same has been regularly kept.

47. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that such special justices shall respectively, at the expiration of each and every quarter, transmit to the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island, a duplicate of the said journal for the preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereto annexed to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which he the deponent has been engaged, as such special justice, during the quarter to which it refers; and the said Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief shall not be at liberty to pay or draw for the salary of the said justice for such quarter until the said duplicate shall have been actually received by him, verified as aforesaid.

Each of the Special Justices to visit estate in his district once a month, or oftener if need be, to investigate complaints.

48. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that each of the said special justices shall once a month, or oftener if required and need be, on certain days to be by him named for that purpose, of which public notice shall be given in the Gazette of the said Island, repair to each estate or plantation situate within his district, cultivated by apprenticed labourers, then and there to take cognizance of all complaints that may be made or brought before him, and shall proceed in the investigation thereof in such and the like manner as if such complaint had been heard and determined at the residence of such special justice in manner before provided.

Persons opposing Special Justices from entering upon estates, or preventing apprentice from resorting to Special Justice to make complaint, how punishable.

49. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every person who shall by force or violence, menace or intimidation, or by any other unlawful means oppose or obstruct any such special justice from entering upon any plantation or estate in the said Island for the purposes aforesaid, or shall by force or menace or other unlawful means oppose or prevent any apprenticed labourer from resorting to or holding communication with any such special justice, for every such offence shall be and be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before the court of King's Bench of the said Island shall suffer such punishment as the court in their discretion shall think the nature of the offence deserves.

Special Justice sentencing apprentice to be confined, may order same to take place upon estate.

50. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that whenever any special justice shall pass sentence of confinement upon any apprenticed labourer, he may, if he shall see fit, direct that such confinement shall take place upon the plantation to which such apprenticed labourer shall belong or be then working upon.

Special Justice to exercise exclusive jurisdiction between apprentices and their employers.

51. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the special justices to be appointed for this Island, (and no other magistrate or justice of the peace) shall have, exercise and enjoy a sole and exclusive jurisdiction over, and shall solely and exclusively take cognizance of all offences committed, or alleged to have been committed by any apprenticed labourer, or by his or her employer in such their relation to each other, or of the breach, violation or neglect of any of the obligations owed by them to each other, or of any question, matter or thing incident to or arising out of the relations subsisting between such apprenticed labourers, and the persons respectively entitled to their services: provided that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the supreme courts of record, or to the superior courts of civil and criminal justice in this Island.

Jurisdiction of Supreme Courts preserved.

Apprentice or employer preferring frivolous and vexatious complaints, how punishable.

52. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer shall prefer a complaint against his or her employer, which shall by such special justice be decided to be frivolous and vexatious, such apprenticed labourer so complaining shall be adjudged by such special justice to work in the service of his or her employer for any time not exceeding in the whole fifteen extra hours in any one week, and if the employer of any apprenticed labourer shall prefer a frivolous complaint against his apprentice, he, she or they shall be adjudged by such special justice to pay a fine not exceeding thirty shillings sterling for the benefit of the party aggrieved.

Apprentice or employer preferring malicious complaint, how punishable.

53. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprentice shall prefer a malicious complaint against his or her employer, it shall and may be competent for such special justice, at the instance of the party charged, to adjudge the complainant to imprisonment with hard labour on the tread-mill for any time not exceeding one month; and if any employer shall prefer a malicious complaint against his or her apprentice, he, she or they shall be adjudged to pay a fine not exceeding five pounds for the benefit of the party charged, which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation or otherwise in respect of such his complaint.

Not lawful for gangs to leave estates to prefer complaints; and when aggrieved, to select some of their number, not exceeding one in twenty, to do so on behalf of the rest.

54. And whereas a practice hath prevailed of gangs of slaves leaving the estates to which they are attached for the purpose of preferring complaints, and such practice hath a tendency to disturb the peace of the Colony, and affords an evil example to the peaceable and well-disposed slaves; Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall not be lawful for any gang of apprenticed labourers to leave the estate to which they are attached for the purpose of preferring any complaints to any person or persons whatsoever; but in all cases where such gang may feel themselves aggrieved, they shall select some of their number, not exceeding one in every twenty, and such person or persons so selected shall apply to his, her or their employer for a pass, but in case of refusal may proceed without it, or any molestation or hindrance, to the special justice of the district, and no other person, for the purpose of laying before him any complaint, or making to him any application respecting any matter or thing cognizable by such special justice; and any person or persons who shall by force, menace or intimidation, or any other unlawful means prevent any apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers so selected from resorting to such special justice for any such purpose as aforesaid, or from returning to his or her place of abode after having so resorted to any such special justice, shall be deemed and considered guilty of a misdemeanor; provided such apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers so selected as aforesaid shall resort to and return from such special justice with due diligence and without any unnecessary loss of time; and such special justice on such complaint or application shall make diligent inquiry into the premises, and afford redress on the grievance being proved, according to the exigency of the case, and in strict conformity with the provisions of this Act; but if it shall appear to such special justice that such complaint or application is without foundation, such special justice shall adjudge the complainant or complainants, or any other apprenticed labourer or labourers that may have been the ringleaders or instigators of such groundless complaints, to work in the service of his, her or their employer, for any time not exceeding in the whole fifteen extra hours in any one week; or if it shall appear to such special justice that the alleged complaint is frivolous, vexatious or malicious, he shall adjudge such complainants or apprenticed labourers to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month.

Any person preventing persons so selected from resorting to Special Justice, guilty of a misdemeanor.

Apprentices to resort to and return from Special Justice with due diligence.

If complaint without foundation, ringleaders or instigators, how punishable.

Each Special Justice authorized to appoint six constables for his district.

55. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that each of the said special justices shall be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to nominate and appoint six fit and able-bodied men to act as a police force for the district to which they may be respectively appointed; which said men shall be sworn in as constables, and shall have all such powers and authorities as any constable duly appointed now has or hereafter may have by virtue of any law or statute now made or hereafter to be made, and shall carry into effect and execution all such orders and directions as they may from time to time receive from the special justice of the district to which they may be attached, for preventing and repressing all crimes and offences committed by any apprenticed labourers, and for enforcing obedience to the rules and regulations hereby established, and shall obey all such lawful commands as they may from time to time receive from the special justice of the district to which they may be attached for conducting themselves in the execution of their office.

Special Justices to frame rules and regulations for the government, &c. of such constables.

56. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said special justices shall from time to time, subject to the approbation of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island, frame such orders and regulations as they shall deem expedient, relative to the general government of the men to be appointed under this Act; the places of their residence, the description of their arms, accoutrements and other necessaries to be furnished them, and all such other orders and regulations relative to the said police force, as the said justices shall from time to time deem expedient for preventing neglect or abuse; and either of the said justices may at any time suspend or dismiss from his employment any man belonging to the said police force whom he shall think remiss or negligent in the discharge of his duty, or otherwise unfit for the same; such suspension or dismissal nevertheless to be subject to the confirmation or disallowance of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island; and when any man shall be so dismissed or cease to belong to the said police force, all powers vested in him by virtue of this Act as a constable, shall immediately cease and determine.

57. And

57. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all summonses warrants, commitments or other orders, to be issued by any such special justice of the peace, in the execution of his duty as aforesaid, shall be executed by one or other of the police constables of his district: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent such special justice from addressing the same, as occasion may require, to any other constable or constables of the said Island, jointly with or instead of such police constables, as to him may seem requisite.

All summonses, warrants, &c. to be executed by police constables.

Not to prevent Special Justice from addressing the same to any other constable.

58. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any summons, warrants or orders issued by any such special justice within his district, may without any further authority be carried into execution in any part of this Island, though beyond the district of the special justice issuing the same.

Summonses, &c. to be carried into execution in any part of the Island.

59. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no fee of office shall hereafter be levied, demanded or payable within the said Colony, upon, for, or on account, or in respect of the discharge and release of any apprenticed labourer; and if any special justice shall hereafter demand, accept or receive any fee of office for the same respectively, the special justice so offending shall incur and become liable to the payment of a fine, amounting to not less than one pound nor more than five pounds, over and above the amount of the fee so by him received.

No fee demandable for release or discharge of apprentice labourer; special justice demanding same, liable to a penalty.

60. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, that on every plantation the said special justices shall and may appoint one or more of the apprenticed labourers thereon, with the consent of the master or manager, to be constables, who shall be empowered to maintain peace and order on such plantation, under the directions of the proprietor or manager thereof, and to secure and place in confinement any apprenticed labourer who shall commit any offence on such plantation, or any apprenticed labourer not employed on such plantation, who may be found lurking thereon without the knowledge or permission of the proprietor or manager thereof; such apprentice, confined as aforesaid, not to be kept in custody longer than shall be necessary to procure the attendance of the special justice: provided always, that if the attendance of a special justice cannot be procured within twenty-four hours, it shall and may be lawful for the proprietor or manager aforesaid to order the release of such apprentice so confined as aforesaid after the expiration of twenty-four hours: provided nevertheless, that in the event of such apprentice being discharged as aforesaid, the proprietor or manager shall, and he is hereby required to prefer the complaint on which such apprentice was confined before the special justice when he shall next come upon the estate; and provided that nothing shall be construed to give to any such constable any power or authority over any of His Majesty's subjects except such apprenticed labourers.

Special Justice may appoint one or more apprenticed labourers on each plantation to act as constables, to keep order and to place in confinement any labourer committing any offence.

Apprenticed labourer not to be confined beyond 24 hours, if Special Justice cannot attend within that time.

If discharged, complaint to be preferred when Special Justice next comes on estate.

Such constables not to have authority, except over apprenticed labourers.

61. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any special justice in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done in pursuance of this Act, shall be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise, and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action; and in any such action the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action, if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought by or on behalf of the defendant; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any such action after issue joined, or if upon demurrer or otherwise, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover his full costs, as between attorney and client, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant hath by law in other cases; and though a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff in any such action, such plaintiff shall not have costs against the defendant, unless the judge before whom the trial shall be, shall certify his approbation of the action, and of the verdict obtained thereupon.

All actions against Special Justice to be commenced within six months, and notice given in writing one month before commencing same.

Tender of amends.

Costs.

Judge certifying.

62. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace who shall be present at the same, shall give due notice to the parties there present to separate and disperse; and all parties who at the expiration of ten minutes from the said warning shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall on conviction thereof before the court of King's Bench of the said Island, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding twelve months.

Any three or more apprenticed labourers committing riot, how punishable.

63. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employers, or the person in the immediate superintendence of their labour, shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy; and every such offender who may be convicted thereof by the court of King's Bench of the said Island, shall be adjudged to confinement with hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, with or without whipping, not exceeding thirty-nine stripes; and any three or more labourers who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, or the person in the immediate superintendence of their labour, shall on conviction thereof before the said court as aforesaid, be adjudged to the punishment last aforesaid, or any one of them, as such court shall think the nature of the offence deserves.

Apprenticed labourers agreeing to make resistance or engaged in a combined and open resistance to lawful commands of employer, how punishable.

No apprentice to reside beyond limits of estate, without written consent of employer.

64. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no apprenticed labourer shall from and after the said first of August now next ensuing, reside beyond the limits of the plantation or estate in which he may be then resident, unless with the authority or consent in writing of his or her employer, or the person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour.

Apprentice found beyond limits of estate, without a written pass (except on way to or from market or church), how punishable.

65. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every apprenticed labourer who shall or may be found beyond the limits of the plantation or estate to which he or she may respectively belong without a written pass from his or her employer, or the person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour (except such apprenticed labourer may be on his or her way to or from market, or to or from some place of public worship), shall be liable to be apprehended and detained, and shall on conviction thereof before the special justice of the district to which he or she may belong, be adjudged to confinement with or without hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, and if a male to any number of stripes, not exceeding ten.

Person giving any document to enable an apprentice to absent himself from employer's services, how punishable.

66. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons shall grant or give any document to enable any apprenticed labourer to absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service, he or she shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be tried by the court of King's Bench of the said Island, and on conviction shall suffer such punishment, by fine or imprisonment, or both, as the court in their discretion shall think proper to inflict.

Any apprentice harbouring another, knowing him to be a runaway, or assisting so to do, how to be punished.

67. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer harbouring, receiving or concealing any other apprenticed labourer who shall have run away from his or her employer's service, knowing him or her to be a runaway, or otherwise shall assist or abet such apprenticed labourer wilfully absenting himself or herself from his or her employer's service, he, she or they shall, on conviction thereof before the special justice of the district in which he, she or they may reside, be liable to be punished by hard labour, not exceeding thirty days, or any number of stripes not exceeding thirty, or both, as the nature of the case may require.

Any person enticing an apprentice, knowing him to be runaway, how dealt with.

68. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person other than an apprenticed labourer, shall entice away any apprenticed labourer from his or her employer's service, or shall harbour, receive or conceal any such apprenticed labourer, knowing him or her to have run away from his or her employer's service, such person shall be liable to pay to the person entitled to the services of such apprentice at and after the rate of three shillings for each and every day such apprentice shall have been so harboured, with full costs of suit to be recovered by action of debt in any court of record in the said Island.

No apprentice to quit the Island without passport from Governor.

69. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no apprenticed labourer shall quit the said Island without a passport from the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island, which passport shall not be granted, except the written consent of the employer of such apprenticed labourer shall be first produced to the said Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any non-prædial apprenticed labourer, registered as a mariner at the office of the special justice of the district he belongs to, and who shall be cleared out as such at the Custom House, from quitting the said Island, in pursuance of such his usual occupation or employment.

Not to prevent apprentice, registered as a mariner, from quitting the Island.

Any apprentice, other than mariner, quitting or attempting to quit, without passport, how punishable.

70. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer other than a mariner, who shall quit or attempt to quit this Colony without such passport first obtained, shall be liable to be prosecuted for each and every such offence in the court of King's Bench to be holden for this Island, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months, as the court in their discretion shall think the nature of the offence deserves.

All persons removing, or assisting to remove apprentice without passport, how punishable.

71. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all persons removing or assisting to remove any apprenticed labourer, other than a mariner, from this Island in any boat or vessel, without a passport first obtained from the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof before the said court of King's Bench of the said Island, forfeit and pay a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or shall be imprisoned for any time not exceeding three months: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any person aggrieved from proceeding against such offender in a civil action for damages sustained.

Not to prevent any person aggrieved from proceeding against offender in a civil action.

Apprentices convicted of establishing themselves as a distinct community, abandoning and neglecting their duty, how punishable.

72. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourers who shall or may be convicted before the court of King's Bench of the said Island, of having established themselves in any part of the said Island as a distinct community without lawful authority, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon them by law, shall, upon conviction before the said court, be sentenced to imprisonment, with hard labour upon the tread-mill, for any time not exceeding six months; and if a male, to be punished by any number of stripes not exceeding thirty-nine; and it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief to cause such community to be dislodged, and if necessary to cause their habitations to be taken down and removed.

73. And

Apprentice absenting himself for seven days or upwards without leave, adjudged a runaway, how punishable.

73. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service without leave for the space of seven days or upwards, shall, on conviction thereof before such special justice, be adjudged a runaway, and shall be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour, or to solitary confinement, for a period not exceeding three months; and if a male, shall be liable to be punished by whipping, not exceeding thirty-nine stripes.

Apprentice wilfully absenting himself from service of employer, to make satisfaction after expiration of apprenticeship term.

74. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, during the continuance of the term of his or her apprenticeship, wilfully absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, and be thereof convicted before any such special justice, and by which wilful absence the employer of such apprenticed labourer shall be deprived of such apprenticed labourer's services before his or her time of apprenticeship shall be expired, such apprenticed labourer shall, at any time or times thereafter, whenever he or she shall be found, be compelled to serve his or her employer for so long a time as his or her employer shall have been so as aforesaid deprived of his or her services, or to make satisfaction to his or her employer for the loss sustained by such deprivation of his or her services (except so far as such apprenticed labourer shall have made satisfaction for such absence, either out of such extra hours, as hereinbefore provided for, or otherwise); and in case any such apprenticed labourer shall refuse to serve as hereby required, or to make such satisfaction to his or her employer, such employer may complain upon oath to the special justice of the district wherein such employer shall then reside, and such special justice shall issue a warrant under his hand and seal for apprehending any such apprenticed labourer; and such special justice, upon hearing the complaint, may determine what satisfaction shall be made to such employer by his or her apprentice, and such apprentice shall, during the extension of the term of his or her apprenticeship as aforesaid, be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work and labour to be by him or her done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be to him or her furnished, as any other apprentice is subject and liable to by virtue of this Act.

Apprentice entering into land without lawful authority to be dispossessed by Special Justice.

75. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any apprenticed labourer shall, without lawful authority, enter into and take possession of any land in this Island belonging to His Majesty or to any other person or persons, it shall and may be lawful for any special justice, and he is hereby required to dispossess such labourer from such land and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same, with all crops growing thereupon, to be delivered up to the owner or owners of such land, or in case such owner shall not, within six months after such seizure, appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the said special justice shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon to be sold, and the proceeds of such sales to be paid over to the public treasurer of the Colony for the public uses thereof: provided always, that no apprenticed labourer shall be dispossessed of any such land during the remainder of the term of his apprenticeship when he shall have been two years in the undisturbed possession thereof.

Not to be dispossessed when he has been two years in undisturbed possession.

Apprentice taking possession of such land, how punishable.

76. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer taking possession of any such land shall on conviction thereof before any such special justice of the peace as aforesaid, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of such special justice, that such possession was taken fraudulently and with knowledge that the party had no lawful claim to the possession thereof, be liable to be sentenced to imprisonment with or without hard labour for any period not exceeding one month.

Not lawful for apprentice to have possession of gunpowder, guns, &c.

77. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer to keep, use or have in his or her possession any gunpowder, guns, swords, pistols or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapons, unless with the knowledge and consent of his or her employer or person in the superintendence of his or her labour; and every apprentice so offending shall, on conviction thereof before any special justice, be punished by confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty-nine, as such special justice shall order and direct; and it shall and may be lawful for the employer of or person in the superintendence of the labour of any apprenticed labourer to seize and retain any gunpowder, guns, swords, pistols or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapon unlawfully in the possession of any apprenticed labourer.

All apprentices employed as fishermen or mariners to be registered as such, and how punishable if not registered.

78. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all apprentices whose ordinary occupation is on the sea, or as fishermen or mariners, shall be registered as such at the office of one or other of the said special justices, and any apprenticed labourer engaging in such occupation, without being first so registered and obtaining a certificate of such registration, shall on conviction before either of the said special justices, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months.

Nothing in this Act contained to exempt apprentices from operation of any law or police regulation in force against persons of free condition.

79. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that nothing in this Act contained doth or shall extend to exempt any apprenticed labourer from, but that every apprenticed labourer shall be subject to the operation of any law or police regulation which is or shall be in force in this Colony for the prevention or punishment of any offence, such law or police regulation being in force against and applicable to all other persons of free condition.

Apprentices to hold and enjoy property of any description.

80. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be competent for any apprenticed labourer in this Island, notwithstanding such his or her apprenticeship, to purchase, acquire, possess, hold, enjoy, alienate, devise and bequeath property of any amount, or of any description, and to bring, maintain, prosecute and defend any action in any court of justice for and in respect of any such property, and to cultivate any land of which he or she may be the proprietor, with or for the growth of any description of produce; any law, usage or custom to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed or deemed to authorize any trespass, or to allow any prædial apprenticed labourer to turn loose or keep, in his employer's property, any horses, mares, mules, asses, cattle, sheep, hogs or goats, without the consent of his said employer being first had and obtained.

Not to authorize keeping horses, mules, cattle, sheep, hogs or goats on employer's property without consent.

Right to the services of apprenticed labourers, how to be transferred.

81. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will, descent, in such and the like manner as the right and title of, in and to any slave or slaves in this Island would have passed or been transferable had this Act not been passed: provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall by virtue of any such bargain and sale, deed, contract, conveyance, will or descent, be subject or liable to be separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her.

Labourer not to be separated from wife, &c.

How consent of Special Justice to be executed and attested for transferring service of apprentice from one estate to another.

82. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that whenever it shall become necessary to obtain the consent of such special justice or justices of the peace as aforesaid for transferring the services of any prædial apprentice from one estate or plantation in the said Island to another plantation or estate, as is required by the provisions of the said recited Act of the Imperial Parliament, such consent shall be in such form as such special justice or justices shall think necessary for the purpose aforesaid, and shall be executed and attested by him or them in the presence of one or more credible witness or witnesses, and the same shall be entered by such special justice or justices in a book to be kept by him or them for that purpose, and the original or a certified copy of such consent shall be delivered to the person or persons seeking for and obtaining such consent.

Children below the age of six years on 1st August or from after that time may be bound out by Special Justice as apprentices to person entitled to service of mother.

83. And whereas it may happen that children who have not attained the age of six years on the said first day of August now next ensuing, or that children who after that day may be born to any female apprenticed labourer, may not be properly supported by their parents, and that no other person may be disposed voluntarily to undertake the support of such children, and it is necessary that provision should be made for the maintenance of such children in any such contingency; Be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any children who on the said first day of August now next ensuing hath not completed his or her sixth year, or if any child to which any female apprenticed labourer may give birth on or after the said first day of August now next ensuing shall be brought before any special justice as aforesaid, and if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any such special justice that any such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, and that such child hath not completed his or her age of twelve years, it shall and may be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required on behalf of such child to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother, if such person or persons shall be willing to take such child as an apprentice; but in case or it shall be made to appear to such justice that the person or persons aforesaid is or are unwilling to enter into such indenture, or is or are unable or unfit so to do, and properly to perform the condition thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required by such indenture to bind any such child to any other person or persons to be by him for that purpose approved, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such condition; and such indenture shall be respectively executed by such special justice, and the person or persons to whom any such child is about to be apprenticed, in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, and recorded in the office of such special justice, and shall be in the following form; that is to say,

Apprentice to be under age of 12 years at date of indenture.

AN ACT to amend an Act, intituled, "An Act to carry into effect the Provisions of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves;" and to repeal certain Clauses of an Act, commonly called "the Slave Act," passed on or about the 15th day of August 1829; and to substitute other Clauses in this Act in lieu thereof.—(Passed 29 May 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS by an Act of the Legislature of this Island, intituled, "An Act to carry into effect the Provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves,'" passed on or about the 2d day of May now last past, it was by the 90th clause thereof enacted, that the effect and operation of the said Act should be suspended until His Majesty should declare and make known his royal pleasure and assent thereto: And whereas his Excellency Major-General Sir Lionel Smith, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the said Island, has been pleased to observe, that the provisions in the said Bill are so closely in accordance with the Act of the British Legislature, that there appeared scarcely any object in retaining the said clause, and has therefore suggested to the Legislature the advantage of expunging the same, so as to allow the Act to come into operation on the 1st day of August next, even if His Majesty's confirmation should not be by that time received: And whereas the Legislature of this Island are desirous of complying with the suggestion of his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief: And whereas it is expedient that the power of inflicting punishment of slaves should be wholly transferred to the magistracy of the said Island; We therefore, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, his Excellency Major-General Henry Charles Darling, Lieutenant-Governor in and over the Island of Tobago and its dependencies, the Council and General Assembly of the same, do humbly pray your most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said 90th clause of the above-recited Act shall be and the same is hereby repealed, and that in lieu thereof the said recited Act shall commence and have operation and effect from and after the 1st day of August in the present year, any thing therein contained to the contrary hereof in anywise notwithstanding.

90th clause of the Abolition Act repealed, and the same to come into operation on the 1st August.

250 copies of Abolition Act to be printed.

2. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that 250 copies of the said recited Act shall be printed at the public expense, for the use of the Legislature, the courts of law, and for distribution to the public.

20th and 21st clauses of Slave Act repealed.

After 1st of June, no owner, &c. to punish any slave for any offence.

Penalty of 5*l.* to be recovered before any two justices of the peace.

3. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the 20th and 21st clauses of the before-recited Act, commonly called "the Slave Act," shall be and they are hereby totally abrogated and annulled; and from and after the 1st day of June now next ensuing, it shall not be lawful for any owner, renter, possessor or employer, or person or persons in charge of any slave or slaves in this Island, to punish any such slave or slaves for any offence by him or her committed, by the whipping, beating or imprisonment of his or her person, or by any other personal or other correction or punishment whatever, under the penalty of 5*l.* for each and every offence; which said penalty shall be recovered on the oath of one or more credible witnesses before any two justices of the peace of the said Island, who shall be and are hereby authorized to issue a warrant, under their hands and seals, for levying the same, which fine shall be paid into the public treasury for the public uses of the Colony; any thing in any law, usage or custom in this Colony to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.

Slaves guilty of indolence, neglect or improper performance of work, &c. o be punished by two next nearest justices f the peace.

4. And whereas it is necessary that regulations should be provided for the maintenance of good order and discipline among such slave or slaves, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such slave or slaves, and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of such slave slave or slaves towards their owners, masters or employers; Be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the 1st day of June now next ensuing, that whenever any slave or slaves shall be guilty of any or either of the aforesaid offences, he or they shall be carried before two of the next nearest justices assigned to keep the peace in the said Island, who shall proceed to hear and determine the same in a summary manner on oath, and shall, on conviction thereof, award and sentence such slave or slaves to such punishment, by whipping, imprisonment and hard labour, as they shall think the nature of the case deserves: provided always, that such punishment shall not exceed thirty days' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, or thirty-nine stripes: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any person or persons from keeping in confinement any slave or slaves who may have committed any of the offences hereinbefore enumerated, until his or her case can be adjudicated by such justices aforesaid.

Such punishment not to exceed 30 days' imprisonment with or without hard labour, or 39 stripes.

Not to prevent keeping slaves in confinement until his case can be adjudicated.

"AN ACT to establish certain Ruls and Regulations for the Classification of those Persons hereafter to become Apprenticed Labourers, and for ascertaining to which Class they shall respectively belong."—(Passed 15 July 1834).

Whereas by an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," passed on or about the 28th day of August now last past, it is amongst other things enacted, that all persons who should by force and virtue of the said recited Act become apprenticed labourers, should, for the purposes therein mentioned, be divided into three distinct classes, and that such division should be carried into effect in such manner and form, and subject to such rules and regulations, as should for that purpose be established under such authority, and in and by such acts of assembly, ordinances, or orders in Council, as thereinafter mentioned: And whereas it is desirable that the necessary rules and regulations for the classification of the said apprenticed labourers should be established by the legislature of this Colony;

Preamble.

We therefore, Your Majesty's most dutiful loyal subjects, his Excellency Major-General Henry Charles Darling, Lieutenant-Governor in and over the Island of Tobago and its dependencies, the Council and General Assembly of the same, do humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the said Lieutenant-Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the said Council and General Assembly of the same, in Session assembled, and by the authority of the same, That all persons who by force and virtue of the said recited Act, or of any Acts of the Legislature of this Island, shall, on the 1st day of August now ensuing, cease to be slaves, and be freed and discharged of and from the obligations of slavery, shall be called and styled apprenticed labourers, and shall be divided into three distinct classes: the first of such class to consist of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery are now employed or worked upon any plantation or plantations in this Colony belonging to persons entitled to their services; the second of such classes to consist of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who, in their state of slavery, are employed or worked in agricultural labour upon any plantation or land in this Colony not belonging to persons entitled to their services; and the third of such classes to consist of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes: Provided always, that no person of the age of twelve years and upwards shall be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall for twelve calendar months at least next before the passing of the said recited Act have been habitually employed or worked upon any such plantation or lands as aforesaid: And provided always, that no person or persons who shall become freed and discharged of and from the obligations of slavery by force and virtue of the third clause of the said recited Act of the Imperial Parliament, or by the first clause of the Act of the Legislature of this Island, intituled, "An Act to carry into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves,'" shall be so styled apprenticed labourers, or be included in either of the said three clauses.

All persons ceasing to be slaves on the 1st August to be styled apprenticed labourers, and to be divided into three distinct classes.

First class to be called prædial attached.

Second class to be called prædial unattached.

Third class to be called non-prædial.

No apprenticed labourer of the age of 12 years and upwards to be included in either of the two first classes, unless employed on plantation or land 12 months prior to the passing of the said Act.

No person being released from slavery by the third clause of the Imperial Act, or by the first clause of the Act of the Legislature, to be called apprenticed labourers.

2. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that on the first day of August now next ensuing, or within thirty days thereafter, every person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer in this Island, or in the event of his being absent from this Island, then the acting attorney, manager, or other representative of such person or persons, shall respectively make out and deliver on oath to the person now officiating as registrar of slaves for this Island, a schedule or list in writing, subscribed by him, her or them, containing a true and correct list of the names of all apprenticed labourers in his or her service or employ, being of the age of six years or upwards; and shall specify in such schedule or list the ordinary occupation or employment of such apprenticed labourers, and shall distinguish, in reference to each of such apprenticed labourer therein mentioned, to which of the said

All persons entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer on the 1st August 1834, or within 30 days after, to make a return on oath to the person officiating as registrar of slaves of the number he, she or they may possess.

said foregoing classes he, she or they respectively belong; and public notice shall be given by the said registrar, in such manner as to him shall seem most effectual, of the time and place of giving in the said return; and for the better ascertaining the proper form of such schedule or list as is hereby required to be made, so that no person may pretend ignorance thereof, forms of such schedule or list are contained in the schedule to this Act annexed, marked (A.) and (B.), to which all persons are required, as far as shall be found practicable, to conform; and printed blank copies of the said forms shall accordingly be provided at the public expense by the said registrar, and delivered, gratis, to all persons applying for the same.

Blank forms to be provided at the public expense.

3. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every person making and subscribing such schedule or list, shall personally deliver the same to the registrar, and shall at the same time take the following oath, which the said registrar is hereby empowered to administer; (to wit)

Person making return to deliver the same to the registrar.

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear, that the contents of the schedule or list now by me delivered are true, and that the same contains, to the best of my knowledge and belief, a true and correct account of the usual occupation and employment of each of the apprenticed labourers therein mentioned and set forth. So help me God."

Oath.

4. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if the said registrar shall see cause to doubt the correctness of the said schedule or list, he shall give notice thereof in writing to the party or parties making and delivering such schedule or list, and require him, her or them to appear before him the said registrar at his office in Scarborough, and at such time as he may thereby appoint, to substantiate the accuracy of such schedule or list; and the person or persons to which such notice shall be addressed and given, shall at the time and place therein named attend before the said registrar, and if required shall bring with him any apprenticed labourer respecting whom such doubt as aforesaid may have arisen; and the said registrar shall then proceed to examine on oath if necessary (which oath he the said registrar is hereby empowered to administer), the person and persons making and delivering such schedule or list, and the apprenticed labourer respecting whom such doubt as aforesaid has arisen; and any witness and witnesses who may be adduced by either party respecting the truth of such schedule or list, and shall, if necessary, adjourn such examination from time to time and place to place as he shall think fit; and the said registrar, after due examination, shall either confirm or correct any such schedule or list as he may see fit, giving notice thereof in writing to the parties making and delivering such schedule or list, and to the apprenticed labourer respectively, regarding whom such doubt has arisen of such his decision thereon.

Registrar doubting the accuracy of any return made to him, to give notice to party making such return, and to summon the same before him.
Persons summoned to bring with them apprenticed labourer, respecting whom any doubt may have arisen, to be examined on oath.

Examination to be adjourned, if necessary.

5. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if either the party or parties making and delivering such schedule or lists, or the apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers to whom it may refer, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the said registrar, such party or parties shall and may on his, her or their behalf, and any other person or persons shall and may on behalf of such apprenticed labourer or apprenticed labourers apply by petition to the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island, setting forth the nature of such decision of the said registrar, and objection or objections thereto, and praying relief in the premises; and the said Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief in Council, by and with the advice of his Council, shall thereupon proceed in a summary manner to examine the matter of such petition, and, with the advice of his Council, to make such order thereupon as shall seem just and proper; which order shall be final and conclusive upon the parties.

Persons dissatisfied with decision of registrar to apply by petition to the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Said Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, with advice of his Council, to make order thereon.

6. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that as soon as any such schedule or list shall have been duly made and received by the registrar, or as soon as the same shall have been duly corrected as aforesaid, the same shall be by the said registrar, his clerks or assistants, entered and copied in a fair, distinct and legible manner, in a book or set of books to be by the said registrar provided and kept for that purpose.

Corrected list or schedule to be entered by the registrar in books kept for that purpose.

7. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that whenever any question shall arise respecting the class to which such apprenticed labourer belongs, the certificate of such registrar, by him subscribed, and the copies and extracts from the said books of the registration of such apprenticed labourer shall be received and taken as conclusive evidence of the matter so certified, and the said registrar shall be entitled to demand and receive for every such certified copy or extract the sum of 1*s.* 6*d.* sterling, if the said copy or extract shall not exceed or relate to above the number of 20 apprenticed labourers additional, and every person or persons shall have free access to the said office to examine the said schedules or lists, and the book or books of registry in the said office, on paying the registrar 4*s.* sterling for every search.

Doubts arising as to which class an apprenticed labourer may belong, to be settled by reference to registrar's books.
Evidence of the same to be conclusive.

8. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons shall wilfully neglect and refuse to make and deliver such schedule or list required by this Act, or in making any such schedule or list, shall wilfully neglect and omit to return in such schedule or list the name of any apprenticed labourer or labourers, which by this Act they are required to return, or if any person or persons shall wilfully neglect or refuse to attend the said registrar to substantiate any such schedule or list, when summoned by him for that purpose, he, she or they shall forfeit for every such apprenticed labourer, so wilfully neglected or omitted as aforesaid, and for every such wilful neglect to attend as aforesaid, the sum of 5*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, to be applied to the public uses uses of the Colony, which said penalty shall be levied by warrant under the hand and seal of the said registrar, directed to the provost marshal of the said Island, or his lawful deputy, in the nature of an execution issuing out of the court of Common Pleas of the said Island, who is hereby required to execute the same at any time of the year; and it shall and may be lawful for the said registrar, in the event of the wilful absence of any such person or persons, after having been duly summoned as aforesaid, to proceed and decide any such question that may arise respecting the correctness of any such schedule or list so to be made and delivered, as though the party or parties had attended before him.

Persons neglecting to deliver such schedule, or wilfully omitting the name of any apprenticed labourer, or refusing to appear before the registrar, when summoned, to be liable to a penalty of 5*l.*

Same to be levied by warrant to be directed to provost marshal.

Registrar to decide any question when parties summoned do not appear.

9. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer within this Colony shall have omitted to make his, her or their return within the time hereinbefore for that purpose limited; and if such person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer shall, within six months next after the expiration of the period aforesaid, apply to the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island in Council, and make it appear to his satisfaction that such omission was not wilful, but arose from accident or some unavoidable impediment from the neglect of some person or persons, other than the true and absolute owner, planter or possessor of the said slave or slaves, and shall then produce his, her or their schedule or list, and make oath before the said Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief in Council, of the correctness of the same, it shall and may be lawful for the said Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief in Council, to make an order in writing, by him subscribed, and addressed to the said registrar, commanding him to receive and register any such schedule or list, as if the same had been delivered in due time, which order the said registrar is hereby required to obey.

Persons omitting to make return within the time limited, to apply to Governor or Lieutenant-Governor in Council within six months after the time limited.

Governor or Lieutenant-Governor in Council to allow persons to make return as of due date, and registrar to receive the same.

10. And whereas upon the said 1st day of August now next ensuing, when slavery is to cease in this Island, the office of registrar of slaves will cease to exist, unless continued for a certain time for the purposes of this Act; Be it therefore, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that upon, from and after the said 1st day of August now next ensuing, the person who, on the 31st day of July, shall be the registrar of slaves within this Colony, shall, at the like rate of salary he now enjoys, continue to hold the office of registrar, for the purposes of receiving such transcripts as aforesaid, and of entering the same into such books as aforesaid, and for other the purposes hereinbefore required, until the 1st day of August, which will be in the year 1835, and no longer.

Person acting as registrar of slaves, on 31st July 1834, to continue for the space of one year from that date.

11. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons taking any oath required by this Act shall swear falsely, or if any person shall procure any other person or persons to make such false oath, then and in those cases such person or persons shall be liable to the pains and penalties to which persons are subject for the offence of wilful and corrupt perjury, or subornation of perjury, by the common or statute law of England.

Persons swearing falsely, how punishable.

12. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the 1st day of August in the present year 1834, the Act, intituled, "An Act to establish a Public Registry of all Slaves in the Colony of Tobago," and passed on or about the 8th day of February 1817; and also an Act, intituled, "An Act to amend an Act, intituled, 'An Act to establish a Public Registry of all Slaves in the Colony of Tobago,'" and passed on or about the 4th August 1818, shall be and the same are hereby respectively repealed, abrogated and annulled.

Act for the registering of slaves, passed in 1817, and amended Act, passed in 1818, repealed.

13. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that this Act shall commence and come into operation on the first day of August now next ensuing.

AN ACT to authorize the temporary appointment of Special Magistrates, for the purpose of giving effect to the Provisions of an Act of the Legislature of this Island, intituled, "An Act to carry into effect the Provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves:'"—(Passed 29 July 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS by an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things enacted, that it should and might be lawful to His Majesty to issue, or to authorize the Governor of any such Colony, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to issue under the public seal of any such Colony, one or more special commission or commissions to any one or more person or persons, constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of any such Colony, or for any parish, precinct, quarter or other district within the same, for the special purpose of giving effect to that present Act, and to any laws which might, in manner thereinafter mentioned, be made for giving more complete effect to the same: And whereas by the forty-fourth clause of an Act of the Legislature of this Island, intituled, "An Act to carry into effect the Provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves,'" it is enacted, that this Island should, for the purposes of that Act, be divided into two or more districts, the respective extents and limits whereof should be fixed by the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council of the same; and the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island should appoint to each of the said districts one of the special justices, to be constituted under and by virtue of the said recited Act of the Imperial Parliament, which said justice should reside within the district to which he should be appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed of by the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Commander-in-Chief of the said Island: And whereas his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of this Island has not yet received any notification of the appointment of any special magistrates for this Island, nor has his Excellency been authorized to issue a special commission to any person or persons in this Island, for the special purpose of giving effect to the said recited Acts: And whereas it is absolutely expedient and necessary, as well to secure the peace and tranquillity of the Island as to give full and ample effect to the provisions of the said recited Acts, that some persons in the said Island should be temporarily appointed to perform the duties attached to the situation of special magistrate:

And whereas doubts have arisen whether his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor can legally make any such appointments, and in order to remove such doubts, we, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, his Excellency Major-General Henry Charles Darling, Lieutenant-Governor in and over the Island of Tobago and its dependencies, the Council and General Assembly of the same, do humbly pray your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted; And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the said Lieutenant-Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the said Council and General Assembly, in Session assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and immediately after the passing of this Act, it shall and may be lawful for his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of this Island,

That it may be lawful for his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor to issue, under the public seal, one or more com-

Island, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to issue under the public seal of this Island, one or more special commission or commissions to any one or more person or persons in the said Island, constituting him or them, until the arrival of the persons nominated or to be nominated special justices as aforesaid, a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of the said Island, or for any parish, precinct, quarter or other district within the said Island, for the special purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the before-mentioned Acts of the Imperial Parliament, and of the Legislature of this Island, and to any laws which may hereafter be passed for giving more complete effect to the said Acts respectively.

Commission or commissions to any one or more person or persons in this Island, to act as special magistrates until the arrival of the person or persons appointed by His Majesty.

2. And be it, and it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every person to or in favour of whom any such commission may be issued, shall, by force and virtue thereof, and without any other qualification, be competent to act as a justice of the peace within the limits prescribed by such his commission, for such special purpose as aforesaid, and shall have, exercise and enjoy the same powers, privileges and authorities as he or they could or might have exercised and enjoyed had he or they been appointed under the immediate authority of His Majesty, under and by virtue of the said Acts of the Imperial Parliament, and of the Legislature of this Island; any thing in the said Acts, or either of them, to the contrary hereof in anywise notwithstanding.

Every person to whom such commission may be issued, to act as a justice, shall have, exercise and enjoy the same powers and authorities as he or they could or might under the immediate authority of His Majesty.

3. And be it, and it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said commission or commissions, so to be issued as aforesaid, shall endure and continue during the pleasure of His Majesty, and no longer.

Commission so issued to continue during the pleasure of His Majesty.

Trinidad. —No. 54.—

AN ORDINANCE, enacted by the Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad, with the advice and consent of the Council of Government thereof, for the purpose of carrying into effect the division of Apprenticed Labourers into classes, as prescribed and required by an Act of the Imperial Parliament, passed on the 28th of August 1833, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies.

(L. S.) G. F. HILL.

WHEREAS by an Act passed in the 3d and 4th years of His Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it was among other things enacted, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who in conformity with the laws then in force in His Majesty's Colonies respectively, should on or before the 1st day August 1834 have been duly registered as slaves in any such Colony, and who on the said 1st day of August 1834 should be actually within any such Colony, and who should by such registries appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834 of the full age of six years or upwards, should by force and virtue of the said Act, become and be apprenticed labourers, and that all such apprenticed labourers should be divided into three classes, the first of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who, in their state of slavery, were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise upon lands belonging to their owners; the second of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who, in their state of slavery, were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes; and that such division should be carried into effect in such manner and form, and subject to such rules and regulations, as should by any Ordinance or Order in Council for that purpose be established and made.

3 & 4 Will. IV. cap. 73.

1. Be it therefore, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by his Excellency the Right honourable Sir George Fitzgerald Hill, baronet, colonel of the Londonderry regiment of militia, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the said Island and its dependencies, by and with the advice and consent of the Council of Government thereof, and by the authority of the same, that for the purposes aforesaid every person who shall at any time between the 1st and the 31st day of January 1834, be resident in the said Island, and who shall be in possession of any plantation slave or slaves within the said Island or its dependencies, whether as proprietor, mortgagee, trustee or receiver, manager or attorney, whatever their title trust or interest therein may be, or who then shall own or possess any slave or slaves whatsoever within the said Island or its dependencies, whatever his or her tenure of or title to the same may be, shall respectively make and deliver upon oath to the registrar of slaves of the said Island, at his office in the town of Port of Spain, true and correct lists or returns in writing and in duplicate in the form hereto annexed, marked (A.), subscribed by him, her or them, containing the registered names of each and every slave in his, her or their possession, or under his, her or their control, management or direction, at the time of delivering such list or return; and such person or persons shall distinguish in such lists or returns to which of the before-described classes each slave when an apprenticed labourer will belong, and for this purpose shall place against and opposite to the name of each prædial attached

Every owner of slaves shall, between the 1st and 31st January 1834, deliver upon oath to the registrar of slaves a return in duplicate, in the form annexed, of all slaves in his possession, distinguishing in such return to which class each slave, when an apprenticed labourer, will belong, and shall place opposite to the name of each prædial attached slave, P. A.; of each prædial unattached, P. U.; and of each non-prædial slave, N.P.

slave the letters P. A., of each prædial unattached slave the letters P. U., and of each non-prædial slave the letters N. P.

Every person making such return to take the following oath:

2. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every person making or subscribing such returns or lists shall personally deliver the same either to the said registrar or to some other person that shall by him be appointed and deputed to receive such lists or returns, and shall at the same time take the following oath, which the said registrar, or any person to be by him appointed and deputed as aforesaid, is hereby empowered and required to administer; (that is to say)

Form of oath.

"I, A. B. [name the deponent] do solemnly swear, that the list or return now by me delivered contains, as I verily believe, a just, true and full account of the names and numbers of all the slaves now attached or belonging to or worked upon the plantation therein named [or belonging to the owner or owners therein named,] and I do further swear that the slaves therein named are now alive, and that the letters set opposite and against the respective names of the said slaves denote the class to which each individual belongs, and that the distinctions therein made of all slaves above the age of twelve years correspond with the occupations usually pursued for twelve months next preceding the 28th day of August 1833 by each slave therein named, and that the said list or return is made by me according to the best of my knowledge and belief truly and without fraud, deceit or evasion. So help me God."

And any person who shall be convicted of swearing falsely shall incur and suffer such punishment as by the laws in force in this Colony may be inflicted on any person guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury.

Registrar to compare returns, and if in any case he shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of the return, to appoint a time and place at which the owner shall attend him to substantiate the accuracy of such return.

3. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the said registrar, on the receipt of such lists or returns, shall proceed to correct the same, and shall carefully compare such lists or returns with the former registries of the slaves named therein; and in case the registrar shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of any such return or list, he shall and he is hereby authorized to appoint a time and place, and to require the owner or owners or other party or parties making any such return or list to attend before him to substantiate the accuracy of such return or list; and at the time and place so to be appointed, the person to whom such notice as aforesaid shall be given and addressed, shall attend before the said registrar, and, if required, shall produce any slave respecting whom any such doubt may have arisen, and thereupon the said registrar shall proceed without delay to examine on oath the person making such list or return, and the slave respecting whom any doubt has arisen, and any witnesses who may be adduced on either side, respecting the truth of such return or list; and the said registrar may adjourn such examination from time to time; and the said registrar shall and he is hereby authorized to confirm or to correct such return or list as to him shall seem fit, giving notice thereof to the party making such return, and to the slaves, respectively, of such his decision.

Registrar to examine the owner and the slave and witnesses, and to confirm or correct such return, giving notice to the owner and the slave of such his decision.

Either party, if dissatisfied with the registrar's decison, may apply to Judge of Court of First Instance by petition, and the Judge shall hear and determine.

4. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in case the party making such return, or the slave or slaves to whom it may refer, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar, such party may on his own behalf, and the registrar may on the behalf of such slave, apply to the chief, or any other judge of the Court of First Instance of Civil Jurisdiction in such Colony, by petition, setting forth the nature of such decision and the objections thereto, and the judge to whom any such petition may be preferred shall proceed in a summary way to hear and to decide upon the same, and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

Judges of the Court of First Instance to make all necessary rules.

5. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the judges of the said court of First Instance of Civil Jurisdiction shall, and they are hereby authorized to make and establish all necessary rules for regulating the proceedings upon every such petition as aforesaid, in the manner which may be most conducive to method, punctuality and despatch.

When return confirmed or corrected, registrar to affix in the book of registry, to the name of each prædial attached, the letters P. A.; of each prædial unattached, the letters P. U.; and of each non-prædial, N. P.

6. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that when and so soon as any return or list shall be confirmed or corrected by virtue of the proceedings aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the registrar of slaves to affix or to cause to be affixed in the books of slave registry, to the entry of the name of each slave duly returned for registration in the year 1834, the initials or letters corresponding to the class to which each slave shall by such list or return appear to belong; that is to say, there shall be affixed to the entry of the name of each prædial attached slave, the letters P. A.; of each prædial unattached slave, the letters P. U.; and of each non-prædial slave, the letters N. P.

When entries made in books of registry, registrar to subscribe lists with his name, to retain one of such lists to be deposited among the Records of the Court of First Instance, and to return the other to the Person making such lists.

7. And it is hereby further enacted, that so soon as such entries as aforesaid shall have been duly made in the said books of registry, and shall have been duly compared by and corrected with the said lists, the registrar shall and he is hereby required to subscribe such lists with his name, and to retain one of such lists to be deposited among the records of the Court of First Instance of Civil Jurisdiction, and the other list shall be given and returned to any person or persons making such lists or returns.

When registry corrected, registrar to verify the correctness thereof before the Governor.

8. And it is hereby further enacted, that when the slave registry shall have been so corrected as aforesaid, the registrar shall verify upon oath before the Governor for the time being that he has duly and accurately compared the several lists and returns made into his office, under the provisions of this Ordinance, with the books of registry in his office, and that the said said books of registry contain a true and faithful record of all those matters and things required by this Ordinance to be done and performed, according to the best of his knowledge and belief.

9. And it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that on or before the 31st day of July 1834, the slave registry so corrected as aforesaid shall be deposited amongst the records of the Court of First Instance of Civil Jurisdiction, and in case at any time any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such corrected registry, or an extract thereof, duly certified by the escribano or registrar of the said court, who is hereby authorized to make and grant the same, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the class to which such apprenticed labourer belongs; and the escribano or registrar shall be entitled to demand and have the following fees; that is to say, for each and every certificate so granted by him as aforesaid, which shall contain any number of names from one to ten inclusive, the sum of 4 s. 4 d. sterling, and 2½ d. sterling for every additional name above ten.

On or before 31st July, 1834, registry to be deposited among the Records of the Court of First Instance, and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such registry shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the fact.

10. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any person who shall neglect or omit to make and deliver the list or return before mentioned, or to take and subscribe the oath hereinbefore set forth, or to attend the registrar, whether as party or witness, when summoned by him for any of the purposes herein mentioned, shall incur a penalty of not more than 10 l., nor less than 20 s.; and in the event of the wilful absence of any party, it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed and to decide any such question as though such party had attended before him.

Any person neglecting or omitting to make the return or to attend registrar when summoned, shall incur a penalty of not more than 10 l. nor less than 20 s. and in the event of wilful absence of any party, registrar to proceed and decide.

11. And it is hereby further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all fines or penalties which shall be incurred under this Ordinance shall be sued for and recovered in the Court of Complaints of this Island, and that the whole amount of such penalties shall accrue to and be for the use of His Majesty.

All fines and penalties under this Ordinance to be recovered in Court of Complaints, and to be for the use of His Majesty.

Passed in Council this 24th day of December 1833.

Philip D. Souper, Colonial Secretary.

Copy of ORDER in COUNCIL, dated 5th June 1834, for giving effect in the Island of Trinidad to the Statute 3d & 4th William the Fourth, c. 73., for the Abolition of Slavery.

At the Court at St. James's, the 5th day of June 1834:

Present, The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Trinidad.

Whereas by a certain Act of Parliament passed in the third and fourth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies;

Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things recited, that it is necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for ascertaining, with reference to each apprenticed labourer within the said Colonies respectively, whether he or she belongs to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and for determining the manner and form in which and the solemnities with which the voluntary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such his or her apprenticeship may be effected, and for prescribing the form and manner in which and the solemnities with which the purchase by any such apprenticed labourer or his or her discharge from such apprenticeship without, or in opposition, if necessary, to, the consent of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, shall be effected, and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services shall be made, and how and to whom the amount of such appraisement shall in each case be paid and applied, and in what manner and form and by whom the discharge from any such apprenticeship shall thereupon be given, executed and recorded: And that it is also necessary for the preservation of peace throughout the said Colonies, that proper regulations should be framed and established for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer, and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter for any hired service during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer, and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers, and for the prevention or punishment of vagrancy or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer, and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance of the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourers, and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourers, during their term of apprenticeship, from the Colonies to which they may respectively belong: And that it will also be necessary for the protection of such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid that various regulations should be framed and established in the said respective Colonies for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance and such other maintenance and allowances as they are by the said Act declared entitled to receive, and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles in cases where the laws at present existing in any such Colony may not in the case of slaves have made any regulation or any adequate regulation for that purpose: And that it is also necessary that proper rules should be established for the prevention and punishment of any frauds which might be practised, or of any omissions or neglects which might occur, respecting the quantity or the quality of the supplies so to be furnished, or respecting the periods for the delivery of the same: And that it is necessary, in those cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid may either wholly or in part be raised by themselves by the cultivation of ground to be set apart and allotted for that purpose, that proper regulations should be made and established as to the extent of such grounds, and as to the distance at which such grounds may be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourers, and respecting the deductions to be made from the cultivation of such grounds from the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereinbefore declared liable to labour: And that it may also be necessary, by such regulations as aforesaid, to secure to the said prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment for their own benefit of that portion of their time during which they are not hereby required to labour in the service of their respective employers, and for securing exactness in the computation of the time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereby required to labour in the service of such their respective employers; and that it is also necessary that provision should be made for preventing the imposition of task-work on any such apprenticed labourer without his or her free consent to undertake the same; but that it may be necessary by such regulations in certain cases to require and provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake: And that it is also necessary that regulations should be made respecting any voluntary contracts into which any apprenticed labourers may enter with their respective employers or with any other person for hired service for any future period, and for limiting the greatest period of time to which such voluntary contract may extend, and for enforcing the punctual and effectual performance of such voluntary contracts on the part both of such apprenticed labourers and of the person or persons engaging for their employment and hire: And that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for the prevention or punishment of any cruelty, injustice or other wrong or injury which may be done to or inflicted upon any such apprenticed labourers by the persons entitled to their services: And that it is also necessary that proper regulations should be made respecting the manner and form in which such indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid shall be made on behalf of such children as aforesaid; and respecting the registry and preservation of all such indentures: And that it is also necessary that provision should be made for ensuring promptitude and despatch, and for preventing all unnecessary expense, in the discharge by the justices of the peace holding such special commissions as in the said Act mentioned of the jurisdiction and authorities thereby thereby committed to them, and for enabling such justices to decide in a summary way such questions as may be brought before them in that capacity, and for the division of the said respective Colonies into districts for the purposes of such jurisdiction, and for the frequent and punctual visitation by such justices of the peace of the apprenticed labourers within such their respective districts: And that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for indemnifying and protecting such justices of the peace in the upright execution and discharge of their duties: And that such regulations as aforesaid could not without great inconvenience be made except by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or other local legislatures of the said respective Colonies, or by His Majesty, with the advice of His Privy Council, in reference to those Colonies to which the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council extends; it is therefore enacted and declared in and by the said Act, that nothing therein contained extends or shall be construed to extend to prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or by such other local legislatures as aforesaid, or by His Majesty, with the advice of His Privy Council, of any such Acts of General Assembly, or Ordinances, or Orders in Council as may be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into full and complete effect: Provided nevertheless, and it is thereby enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any such Governor, Council and Assembly, or for any such local legislature, or for His Majesty in Council, by any such Acts of Assembly, Ordinances or Orders in Council as aforesaid, to make or establish any enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order which shall be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to the said recited Act or any part thereof, but that every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order shall be and is thereby declared to be absolutely null and void and of no effect.

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the said recited Act of Parliament, and for carrying the same into effect within the Island of Trinidad, it is hereby ordered by His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, that the several rules and regulations contained in the twelve chapters hereunto subjoined and annexed, and which twelve chapters are and shall be taken to be part of this present order, shall extend to and be in force within the Island of Trinidad and the dependencies thereof, upon, from and after the 1st day of August in this present year 1834.

(signed) C. C. Greville.

CAP. I.—On the Judicial and Ministerial Agency to be employed.

1. The Colony of Trinidad shall be divided into not less than five judicial districts.

2. The Lieutenant-Governor shall by proclamation define, and, as occasion may require, shall alter the limits of such districts.

3. One special justice, at least, shall be appointed to each of the before-mentioned districts.

4. In each district shall be set apart one or more tract or tracts of land, which, with the buildings to be erected thereon, shall be called the Police Settlement or Police Settlements of the District.

5. Every such police settlement shall be established in the vicinity of as large a body as may be of the population of the district.

6. It shall be lawful for the special justice or special justices of each district to license in such district places of safe custody and correction, situate at convenient distances from each other.

7. The Lieutenant-Governor shall appropriate for the formation of the police settlements any waste lands of the Crown which may be situate conveniently for that purpose; and in districts where such Crown lands cannot he found, shall, by exchange or purchase, procure the lands wanting for the purpose.

8. At the first formation of any such police settlement, the members thereof, assisted by such hired labourers as may be indispensable, shall be employed in the erection of temporary buildings for their own occupation; such buildings to be hereafter superseded by more permanent buildings, to be erected by the means subsequently mentioned.

9. At each police settlement shall be erected a house of correction.

10. Until permanent police settlements shall be formed and the buildings requisite for that purpose erected, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, to procure and provide, by hire or otherwise, suitable buildings to be occupied temporarily as police settlements.

11. At each police settlement shall also be established a penal gang, to be composed of such persons as shall be condemned to imprisonment with hard labour.

12. Every such police settlement, place of safe custody and correction, shall be placed under the general charge of the special justices of the district, and under the immediate superintendence of a special justice of the district, to be selected by the Lieutenant-Governor for that purpose, and who shall be called a superintending special justice, and shall reside thereat or in the immediate vicinity thereof.

13. Each police settlement shall consist of no less than one serjeant and five privates, all being able-bodied men, between the ages of 20 and 50 years.

14. The serjeant and privates of each police settlement shall be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor, and shall be liable to be removed by him for bad conduct or inefficiency.

15. The serjeants and privates shall be liable to be suspended from office by the superintending special justice or justices of the district, subject to the Lieutenant-Governor's confirmation or disallowance of such suspension.

16. In addition to the police force stationed at each police settlement, the superintending special justice shall appoint and swear in such persons in their respective districts, as they shall think fit, to act as constables. Nothing herein contained shall prevent an apprenticed labourer from being appointed, sworn in, and acting as a constable.

17. The superintending special justices shall, once in each quarter, respectively make to the Lieutenant-Governor a report of the effective strength and condition of the police force at each settlement; and of the state of the buildings and provision grounds there, and of the state and conduct of the prisoners confined therein.

18. The Lieutenant-Governor shall from time to time, by and with the advice of the Legislative Council, frame and publish all necessary rules for the internal discipline of the said police settlements, and of the said places of safe custody and correction; for the clothing, arming, supporting and remunerating the serjeants and privates of the said police; for remunerating the said constables; for securing the due performance, by the said police and constables, of their respective duties; for the employment of the penal gang and also of the serjeants and privates of the said police when not engaged in police duties; for the support of the prisoners in the said houses of correction and places of safe custody; for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes; for the classification of prisoners; for their religious instruction; for the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety amongst them; and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules. And all rules so framed and published shall be transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and shall, until disallowed or altered, remain in full force.

19. It shall be the duty of the serjeant and the privates to carry into execution such orders as they shall receive from the special justice for the prevention or repressing of crimes, and for enforcing obedience to the law, and for inflicting such punishments as are hereby authorized.

CAP. II.—On the procedure to be observed by the Special Magistrates in the exercise of their Jurisdiction.

1. Every superintending special justice shall reside within the district to which he is appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed by the Lieutenant-Governor.

2. Every such superintending special justice shall one day in each week or oftener if need be, at the place of his residence, hold a session for the hearing and deciding upon such cases as may be brought before him.

3. Every plantation in each district upon which ten or more apprenticed labourers shall be employed shall be visited by a superintending or other special justice once in each fortnight, or oftener if need be, who shall there take cognizance of such cases as may be brought before him, whether such cases shall relate to apprenticed labourers employed on that plantation or to any any other apprenticed labourers.

4. Every such special justice shall keep a journal of all the cases brought before him, in which he shall enter, 1st, the date of the complaint; 2d, the name of the complainant; 3d, the substance of the complaint; 4th, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; 5th, the substance of the evidence; 6th, his decision on the case; 7th, whether the decision has been carried into effect; 8th, any general remarks which he may think desirable.

5. All such journals shall be kept in one uniform manner, to be prescribed for that purpose by the Lieutenant-Governor.

6. At the end of each quarter the special justice shall transmit to the Lieutenant-Governor a duplicate of his journal for the preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereto annexed, to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which the deponent has been engaged as such special justice, during the quarter to which it refers.

7. On receiving any complaint, it shall be the duty of the special justice to reduce it to writing, and to cause it to be read by, or to read it over to, the complainant, by whom it shall then be subscribed.

8. If the complaint shall appear to the justice immaterial, and not to deserve further inquiry, he may at once dismiss the complaint; but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the complainant to make oath that the complaint is true.

9. Upon taking any complaint, to the truth of which such oath shall have been so made, the special justice shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged, or shall issue, if necessary, a summons for his attendance, as the case may require. The warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed marked (A.), and the summons in the form annexed marked (B.)

10. The warrant of arrest shall be issued in all cases which impute to the party charged a capital or a transportable offence; in all cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged would endeavour to escape; and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay. In all other cases the justice is to proceed in the first instance by summons, if necessary.

11. In cases in which it may be necessary to adduce witnesses in support of or in answer to any such complaint, the justice shall issue a summons, if necessary, to every such witness, in the annexed form, marked (C.)

12. At the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, the justice shall, in the presence of all parties, or of such of them as being summoned shall attend in pursuance of such summons, first read over the written complaint, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining, and the witnesses, taking down in writing the deposition of each witness, which shall be read over to and signed by him.

13. The justice may from time to time adjourn any such proceeding for further inquiry, and if necessary commit the party charged to custody pending such adjournment, or take bail for his appearance. Every such commitment or bail shall be in the annexed forms, marked (D.) and (E.)

14. At the close of such proceedings, the justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, which decision he shall reduce into writing, and subscribe with his hand.

15. By any such decision the justice shall, as law and reason may seem to him to require, either dismiss the complaint, or sanction any lawful compromise between the parties which he may think just, or convict the party charged, or commit him to prison to take his trial for the imputed offence.

16. If the complaint shall be dismissed, the justice shall, in such his written decision, state whether it was so dismissed as being unproved, or as being frivolous and vexatious, or as being malicious.

17. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, the justice may adjudge the complainant, if a labourer, to work in the service of his employer, for any time not exceeding in the whole 15 extra hours in any one week, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 15; or if the complainant be the employer, the justice may adjudge each employer to the payment of a penalty for the use of the labourer, of not less than 10*s.* sterling, and not greater than 5*l.* sterling.

18. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as malicious, it shall be competent to the justice, at the instance of the party charged, to adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to imprisonment with hard labour, for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30; or, if the employer of any such labourer, to a fine not less than 40*s.* sterling, and not greater than 10*l.* sterling, for the benefit of the party charged; which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation or otherwise, in respect of such his complaint.

19. If the justice shall, by such his decision, convict the party charged, or shall convict the complainant of preferring a frivolous and vexatious, or a malicious complaint, such conviction shall be severally drawn up according to the forms annexed, marked (F.) (G.)

20. If such magistrate shall commit the party charged to take his trial for the imputed offence, such commitment shall be drawn up in the form annexed, marked (H.)

21. Upon any such conviction as aforesaid by such special justice, he shall forthwith issue a warrant for the execution thereof.

22. All summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders, so to be issued by any such justice as aforesaid, shall be executed by the police officers of his district; such justice being nevertheless authorized, as occasion may require, to address the same to any other person or persons jointly with or instead of such officers of police, as to him may seem requisite.

23. Any summons, warrant or order, issued by any such special justice within his own district, may, without any further authority, be carried into execution in any part of the Colony, though beyond such district.

24. If any person summoned by any such justice as a witness, shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or appearing shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him by such justice in relation to the matters depending before him, it shall be lawful for such justice to issue his warrant for the arrest of any such defaulter, or to commit him to close custody, there to remain until he shall submit to be so sworn and examined, and to make such answers as aforesaid. Every such warrant of arrest or commitment shall be in the forms annexed, marked (I.) and (K.)

25. If it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant-Governor and Legislative Council that the forms of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed are needlessly burdensome upon the justices of the several districts within the Colony, or of any one or more of such districts; or that they impede or interefere with the prompt and effective execution of the law, the Lieutenant-Governor, with advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall be entitled to suspend any part of the preceding rules relating to such procedure, or to adapt the same to the circumstances of the case, so as more effectually to promote the punctual, orderly and effective execution of the law; and for that purpose to frame and publish rules and ordinances, which shall be transmitted for His Majesty's confirmation, and which, until disallowed, shall be in full force.

26. It shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor to assign to such one or more of the special justices as he shall select for that purpose, the following duties; namely, to examine into the quarterly journals hereby directed to be transmitted by the special justices to the Lieutenant-Governor; to visit the judicial districts throughout the whole or any part of the Colony, and to inspect the police settlements and places of safe custody and correction belonging to such districts; and to examine into the state of the police force, and of the prisoners in the houses of correction and places of safe custody, and of the penal gangs in such districts, and generally to ascertain how far the rules hereby established, or to be established, under the provisions herein contained, are duly observed, and to report to the Lieutenant-Governor, at such times and in such manner as the Lieutenant-Governor shall direct, upon the several matters aforesaid.

27. If any suit or action shall be commenced against any special justice, in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done by virtue and in pursuance thereof; and if the court shall give judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff shall, by such judgment, be condemned to pay treble costs of suit.

28. If in any such suit or action such justice shall, at any time before final judgment, tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred; and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept such amends and costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court at the trial of such suit, that such amends have been so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff in the amount of the sum so tendered, subject nevertheless to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the defendant.

29. No suit or action shall be brought against any such justice in respect of any matter or thing by him done under or in pursuance hereof, unless the same shall be commenced within six months after the cause of action occurred.

CAP. III.—On the Division of Apprenticed Labourers into their respective Classes.

1. By a day to be appointed for that purpose, the registrar of slaves shall deliver to every owner of slaves, a list of the slaves appearing in the registry to belong to him; for which a fee of 2 s. only shall be charged.

2. By a time to be fixed for the purpose, every such owner of slaves shall return such list to the registrar, distinguishing in reference to each slave therein mentioned to which of the three classes he belongs.

3. To every such return shall be annexed an affidavit to the effect that the distinctions therein made correspond with the occupations usually pursued for 12 months next preceding the date of the Act by each of the slaves to whom such returns may refer.

4. If in any case the registrar shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of the return, he shall appoint a time and place at which the owner shall attend him to substantiate the accuracy of such return.

5. At the time and place so to be appointed the person to whom such notice shall be addressed shall attend such registrar, and if required shall bring with him any slave respecting whom any such doubt may have arisen.

6. The registrar shall then proceed to examine the person making such return, and the slave respecting whom such doubt has arisen, and any witnesses who may be adduced respecting the truth of such return; and may, if necessary, adjourn such examination from time to time.

7. The registrar shall then either confirm or correct any such return, as he may see fit, giving notice to the party making such return and to the slaves respectively, of such his decision.

8. If either the party making such return, or the slave to whom it may refer, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar, such party may on his own behalf, and the registrar may on the behalf of such slave, apply to the chief or to any other judge of the superior court in such Colony, by petition, setting forth the nature of such decision and the objections thereto.

9. The judge to whom any such petition may be preferred shall proceed in a summary way to hear and to decide upon the same, and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

10. The judges of the said court shall make all necessary rules for regulating the proceedings upon every such petition, in the manner which may be most conducive to method, punctuality and despatch.

11. When such proceedings as aforesaid shall have taken place, there shall be affixed to the entry of the name of each prædial attached slave in the registry the letters P. A.; of each prædial unattached slave the letters P. U.; and of each non-prædial slave the letters N. P.

12. During the continuance of the apprenticeship, the slave registry, so corrected as aforesaid, shall be deposited amongst the records of the superior courts of the Colony; and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such corrected registry, or a certified extract thereof, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the fact.

13. Any person neglecting or omitting to make the return or the affidavit before mentioned, or to attend the registrar when summoned by him for that purpose, shall incur a penalty of not more than 10 l. nor less than 20 s.: and in the event of the wilful absence of any such person, it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed and to decide any such question as though such party had attended.

CAP. IV.—On the Maintenance of the Apprenticed Labourers.

1. It shall be the duty of every employer of prædial apprenticed labourers, within the third week of the month of September of each year, to deliver or cause to be delivered to the special justice of the district in which such prædial apprenticed labourers are resident, a written declaration in the form annexed, marked (L.), specifying whether it is the intention of such employer, during the current year, to maintain his prædial apprenticed labourers by the cultivation of ground, to be to them appropriated for that purpose, or by an allowance of provisions.

2. That every employer who shall, by such declaration as aforesaid, propose to maintain his prædial apprenticed labourers by an allowance of provisions, shall be and is hereby bound and and required to supply to such prædial apprenticed labourers such amount of provisions, and of such kind, as by the clause next hereinafter contained are directed to be supplied to non-prædial apprenticed labourers above the age of 10 years.

3. Every employer shall be and is hereby bound and required to maintain his non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and also his prædial apprenticed labourers, until such written declaration shall have been so made and delivered by him as aforesaid, by an allowance of provisions, and to supply such provisions to the amount and of the kinds following; that is to say, each and every apprenticed labourer, above the age of 10 years, shall receive in each week not less than six pints of wheaten or rye-flour or rice, or nine pints of corn-meal or farine of manioc, or seven pounds of biscuit, or 50 full-grown plantains, or 21 pounds of yams or sweet cassada, or sweet potatoes, or eddoes, or tanniers, and three pounds and a half of good salted cod fish, commonly called salt fish; and to all apprenticed labourers under the age of 10 years one-half of the above allowance.

4. All provisions so to be supplied to the apprenticed labourers in the Colony of Trinidad, shall be sound and fit for consumption, and of good average merchantable quality.

5. The apprenticed labourers to whom such provisions shall be supplied, shall also be provided by and at the expense of their employers, with the means of preserving the same from week to week, and of properly preparing the same for human food.

6. Every employer of prædial apprenticed labourers, who shall by such declaration as aforesaid propose to maintain such prædial apprenticed labourers by the appropriation of ground, to be by them cultivated for that purpose, shall be and is hereby bound and required to set apart for every prædial apprenticed labourer so to be maintained half an acre of land, properly adapted for the growth of provisions, and not more that two miles distant from the place of residence of such prædial apprenticed labourer.

7. Every such employer shall be and is hereby bound and required to supply every prædial apprenticed labourer, for whom any such ground shall be so appropriated, with such seeds and with such implements of husbandry as may be necessary for the cultivation of such ground, on the first entering of such prædial apprenticed labourer in the occupation thereof.

8. It shall not be lawful for any person whomsoever to dispossess any prædial apprenticed labourer of any land so cultivated by him or her, until such labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground.

9. The crops, when growing upon any such ground and when severed therefrom, shall and are hereby declared to be the sole and absolute property of the prædial apprenticed labourer, for and in respect of whom such ground shall have been appropriated and set apart.

10. Every prædial apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated and set apart for his support, shall, out of the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourer is by the said recited Act required to labour, after the rate of 45 hours per week, as aforesaid, be allowed such number of hours, not being fewer than four hours and a half per week, and not being more than seven hours and a half per week, as the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall, by rules to be framed for that purpose, determine; which rules shall be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and until disallowed or altered shall remain in full force.

11. If any employer of prædial apprenticed labourers within the said Colony of Trinidad shall neglect or omit to sign and deliver, in manner and within the time hereinbefore mentioned, such written declaration as aforesaid, he or she shall incur a penalty of 2 l. for such omission or neglect in respect of the first week in which the same shall occur, with additional penalties of 4 l. in the second week, 6 l. in the third week, and so on in arithmetical progression in respect of each additional week during which such neglect shall be continued; and if any employer or manager of apprenticed labourers shall not supply to such apprenticed labourers provisions of such amount and quality, and at such times as he is hereinbefore required to supply the same, or shall not provide such apprenticed labourers with the means of preserving such provisions from week to week, or with the means of properly preparing the same for human food, every employer shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the value of the provisions which ought so to have been supplied, or for the preservation and preparation of which such means as aforesaid ought to have been provided, which last-mentioned penalties shall accrue to and be for the benefit of the apprenticed labourers injured by any such omission or neglect; and if any such employer of prædial labourers shall not set apart for every prædial apprenticed labourer who is maintained by the cultivation of ground such land of such quality and quantity and so situate as hereinbefore is required, or shall neglect or omit to supply any such prædial apprenticed labourer with such seeds and implements of husbandry as aforesaid, or shall dispossess any such prædial apprenticed labourer of any land by him or her cultivated, until such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground, every person so offending shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the amount of the loss sustained by every such prædial apprenticed labourer by every such act, omission or neglect, which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the prædial apprenticed labourer so injured; and if any such employer of prædial apprenticed labourers shall neglect or omit to allow to any prædial apprenticed labourer, for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated, such number of hours as aforesaid in each week for the cultivation thereof, every person so offending shall for each and every such offence incur a distinct and separate penalty of 10*s.*, which shall go and be applied to and for the benefit of the prædial apprenticed labourers injured thereby, the number of such penalties being equal to the number of prædial apprenticed labourers affected by such offence, multiplied by the number of the days on which such offences may have been repeated.

12. It is and shall be the duty of every employer of apprenticed labourers within the said Colony once, that is to say, either in the month of January or in the month of June in each year, and he or she is hereby required to deliver to every such apprenticed labourer, for his or her use, either in the month of January or in the month of June in each and every year, the following articles, (that is to say):—

To every male apprentice labourer above the age of five years:

One felt hat, one Scotch bonnet, one cloth wrapper or jacket, two red flannel or oznaburgh or check shirts, two pairs of cloth, oznaburgh, or duck or sheeting trowsers, and one knife.

To each and every female apprenticed labourer above the age of five years:

One felt hat, one cloth wrapper, two neck-kerchiefs, two linen or cotton shifts, two dowlas or oznaburgh petticoats and one pair of scissars. Also, to every apprenticed labourer one tin pan or pannekin annually, one blanket every two years, and one iron pot every three years, or oftener if necessary.

13. All the articles so to be supplied to such apprenticed labourers aforesaid, shall be of good average merchantable quality.

14. If any employer of apprenticed labourers in the said Colony shall neglect or omit, within the time or times hereinbefore for that purpose limited, to supply and deliver to and for the use of any apprenticed labourer under his or her management, such articles of clothing and household furniture as are hereinbefore referred to, the person so offending shall incur and become liable to a fine equal to twice the value of the article or articles so withholden, which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the apprenticed labourer injured by such neglect.

15. Every employer of apprenticed labourers within the said Colony shall be, and is hereby required to supply each and every apprenticed labourer under his or her management with a wooden or iron bedstead, or with boards so arranged as to enable every such apprenticed labourer to sleep during the night at an elevation of one foot, at the least, above the ground; and every employer who shall neglect or omit so to supply any such apprenticed labourer with such bedstead, or such means of sleeping above the ground as aforesaid, shall, for every such neglect or omission, incur and become liable to a fine 5*s.*, in respect of each and every apprenticed labourer, which fine shall be again incurred from week to week as long as such neglect or omission shall continue.

16. Every person in the said Colony being the employer of 40 apprenticed labourers or upwards, shall and is hereby required to engage a medical practitioner to visit such apprenticed labourers in such his medical capacity once at the least in each fourteen days; and it shall be the duty of such medical practitioner, and he is hereby authorized and required to keep a journal of the health of such body of apprenticed labourers, so placed under his medical superintendence, in which journal he shall, once in each fourteen days, record what is the general state of health of such body of apprenticed labourers, and shall also enter the name of each apprenticed labourer then labouring under sickness, distinguishing such apprenticed labourers as are thereby disqualified for the ordinary amount of labour, and prescribing such medicines or articles of diet as may in his judgment be necessary for the restoration of the sick; and it shall be the duty of every such medical practitioner once in each fortnight to deliver a copy of the entries so made by him in his journal to the employer of such apprenticed labourers, which employer shall be and is hereby required to supply such apprenticed labourers with such medicines or nourishments, and to allow to such apprenticed labourers such relaxations of labour as may by such medical practitioner be so recommended and prescribed; and in reference to every apprenticed labourer for whom any such nourishment may be provided, the rules hereinbefore contained respecting the food of apprenticed labourers shall be and are hereby suspended; and every such medical practitioner shall and is hereby required, in obedience to any requisition to him for that purpose made in writing by any such superintending special justice, to produce to such justice his journal; and in case of any acute or dangerous disease of any apprenticed labourer, the employer of such apprenticed labourer shall and is hereby required to employ, at his own costs and charges, a medical practitioner for the care and medical treatment of such apprenticed labourer.

17. If any such employer of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid in the said Colony, or if any such medical practitioner as aforesaid shall refuse, neglect or omit to do or perform any matter or thing which such employer or medical practitioner is hereby required to do and perform in and about the engagement of such practitioner, or in or about the keeping such journal as aforesaid, or in or about the medical treatment, nourishment or temporary relaxation of labour of any apprenticed labourer, or in or about the production, when thereunto required, of any such journal as aforesaid, the person so offending shall, for and in respect of every such offence, incur and become liable to a fine of not less than 2*l.* or more than 20 l.

18. Every apprenticed labourer who, on account of any disease, the medical practitioner shall deem it necessary to confine to the hospital, or to any apartment thereof for the purpose of cure, shall be bound, and if necessary may be compelled to submit to such hospital regulations as shall be sanctioned by a superintending special justice of the district in which such apprenticed labourer shall be resident.

CAP. V.—On the Duties to be performed by the Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their non-performance.

1. As regards the apportionment of the 45 hours per week, during which prædial apprenticed labourers are required by law to work for their employers, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-

Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, to make such regulations in respect thereof, as may appear to them best adapted to promote the interests both of the apprenticed labourers and their employers, and to frame and publish rules and ordinances for that purpose, which shall be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and which until disallowed or altered, shall remain in full force.

2. Subject to the provision lastly hereinbefore contained, and subject also to the deduction of the time hereinbefore directed to be allowed to prædial apprenticed labourers for the cultivation of their provision grounds, every prædial apprenticed labourer shall be bound and obliged to work and labour for seven hours and a half in each and every day in the year (Sundays and holidays hitherto allowed by law to the labouring population excepted) in the service and for the benefit of his employer.

3. For every hour in which any labourer shall absent himself from his employer's service without reasonable cause, he shall be compelled to serve two extra hours, and so in proportion for every portion of time greater or less than an hour, provided that such extra hours shall not exceed fifteen in the whole in any one week.

4. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for more than seven and a half hours in any one week, shall be adjudged a deserter.

5. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for two days during one week, shall be adjudged a vagabond.

6. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for more than six days in any one week, shall be adjudged a runaway.

7. The reasonableness of the cause of absence shall in each case be decided by the special justice.

8. Apprenticed labourers adjudged deserters shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; those adjudged vagabonds, to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, and to any number of stripes not exceeding fifteen; those adjudged runaways, to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty.

9. Any apprenticed labourer convicted of performing his work indolently, carelessly, or negligently, shall for the first offence be adjudged to labour in his employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week; or in case such labourer be a non-prædial labourer, to whipping not exceeding fifteen stripes; for the second offence, if within two calendar months, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; for the third or any subsequent offence, if within two calendar months of the first offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one fortnight, with whipping not exceeding twenty stripes.

10. Any labourer who by the careless use of fire shall wilfully endanger the property of his employer or any other person, or who shall wantonly injure the property of his employer intrusted to his care, or who shall ill use the cattle or other live stock of his employer, or who shall by wilful negligence expose his employer's property to any damage or injury, shall for such offence be adjudged, in the discretion of the justice, either to extra labour in his employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty lashes, or to any two of such punishments: Provided that this enactment shall not exempt any such labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him or her done or omitted, although no such labourer shall be liable to be so sued or prosecuted, both under this order and under such general law as aforesaid.

11. Any apprenticed labourer who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his employer shall be liable to any one or any two of the punishments last aforesaid.

12. Any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employers shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be adjudged to confinement to hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, with whipping not exceeding thirty-nine stripes.

13. Any three or more labourers who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, shall, on conviction, be adjudged to the punishments last aforesaid, or any one of them.

14. Any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself in an insolent and insubordinate manner towards his employer or any person in the immediate superintendence of his labour, shall, for every such offence, be liable on conviction to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping, not exceeding fifteen stripes.

15. Provided always, that no woman shall be subject to be punished by whipping for any offence by her committed; but that in all cases aforesaid in which that punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying to the case of males only, and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any such male offender, shall, when committed by females, be punished by confinement in the stocks. The stocks to be employed forthat purpose shall all be according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the Lieutenant-Governor, and no female shall for any offence by her committed be confined in the stocks after sunset or before sunrise, or for more than eight hours in the whole for any one day, or for more than two days consecutively, or for more than six days on the whole for any one offence.

16. All the offences aforesaid shall be inquired of by the magistrates having special commissions, and not by any other justice of the peace. But any such special magistrate may, if he shall see occasion, refer any such case for trial to the superior court of the Colony.

CAP. VI.—On the Duties to be performed by the Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their non-performance.

1. If the employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall, by force or fraud, protract the weekly services of such labourer beyond the period by law allowed for that purpose, he shall forfeit, for the benefit of such labourer, the sum of 1*s.* in respect of every hour which such service shall be protracted.

2. It shall be the duty of every such employer to intimate to the labourers in his employment, the commencement and the close of the legal hours of labour; for which purpose, a signal shall be given in such manner as shall, in reference to each plantation, have been previously approved by the special justice of the district.

3. No apprenticed labourer shall be bound to undertake any task-work, except with his own free assent to the same, save as hereinafter is excepted.

4. Every contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any specific work as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall, by such employer, be reduced into writing and entered in a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation; which book it shall be the duty of the special justice to inspect, as often as he shall in manner aforesaid repair to the several plantations within his district.

5. No contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any such specific or task work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure or continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of 14 days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties in the presence and with the approbation of such special justice of the peace, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him before the expiration of such 14 days. And every such approbation of any such contract shall, by such special justice, be attested under his hand in the book so to be kept as aforesaid.

6. It shall be the duty of the special justice, before approving any such contract, to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same; and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust.

7. In every such contract for task-work, or for extra service extending beyond the period of one fortnight, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed.

8. No contract for such extra service as aforesaid shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

9. Upon proof being made, to the satisfaction of such special justice, of the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra services, it shall be competent to such justice and he is hereby authorized to award execution against such employer for the amount of such consideration; and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such award, to issue an attachment against the produce, utensils and other chattels upon such plantation, which execution and award shall be respectively in the forms annexed, marked (M.) and (N.)

10. Such execution and attachment as aforesaid shall be executed by the serjeant of the police of the district, who shall thereunder seize and sell so much of the produce, utensils and other chattels as may be found upon such plantation as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, delivering over the surplus, if any, to such employer.

11. Any apprenticed labourer violating the terms of such contract as aforesaid, for task-work or for extra service, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him performed in the discharge of the services owing by him by law to such his employer, unless specific penalties are named in the contract.

12. Every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid for task-work or for extra service.

13. If any employer of any apprenticed labourer, or any person who, as manager or otherwise, exercises the authority of the employer over any apprenticed labourer, shall whip, beat, imprison, confine in the stocks, or otherwise maltreat any such apprenticed labourer, or shall by way of punishment commit any assault upon his person, such employer, or other person, shall incur a penalty, to be imposed by such special justice as aforesaid, not exceeding 5 l., with imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, in default of the payment of such fine.

14. In any such case as last aforesaid, it shall be competent to any such apprenticed labourer, instead of preferring his complaint to such special justice, to maintain any civil suit or action, as in the case of any other free person, for damages for such assault; and it shall also be competent to such special justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit the offender to take his trial for such offence before any court having jurisdiction in the premises. If any such employer, or other person, shall be convicted before any court of competent jurisdiction of any cruelty towards his apprenticed labourer, or if any such employer, or other person, shall be twice convicted of inflicting any corporal punishment, or of making any assault upon the person of any such labourer, then the labourer may be discharged from his apprenticeship by order of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

CAP. VII.—On Offences which may be committed by the Apprenticed Labourers against the State, and the Punishment of such Offences.

1. If any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace who shall be present at the same shall cause a flag or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited as a warning to all persons there present to separate and disperse quietly.

2. All persons who, at the expiration of 10 minutes from the exhibition of such flag or signal, shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall, on conviction, be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding 12 months.

3. No prædial attached apprentice labourer shall reside beyond the limits of the plantation on which he may be resident on the 1st of August next, unless either by the authority of his employer or with the consent in writing of the special justice of such district.

4. Every labourer found in any place more than five miles distant from his residence, except in his way to or from some place of public worship, and not having with him a written pass for that purpose from his employer, or from the special justice of the district, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained and brought before a special justice; and unless such labourer shall make it appear to the satisfaction of such special justice that he or she, when so found, was employed upon his or her lawful occasions, such labourer shall, on conviction, be adjudged a vagabond and punished accordingly.

5. If it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any special justice that any apprenticed labourers have, without lawful authority, established themselves in any part of the Colony as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon them by law, such justice of the peace shall cause any such community to be dislodged, and, if necessary, shall also cause their habitations to be taken down and removed.

6. Any labourer convicted of having been a member of any such community shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months, and, if a male, to whipping by any number of stripes not exceeding 39.

7. If any labourer shall, without lawful authority, enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty, or to any other person, it shall be lawful for any special justice to dispossess such labourer from such land, and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same, with all crops growing thereupon, to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not, within one month after such seizure, appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the special justice shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon to be sold, and the proceeds of such sales to be paid over to the public treasurer of the Colony.

8. The summary process aforesaid shall not be taken in any case where any such apprenticed labourer may have been for two years in the undisturbed possession of any such land.

9. The special justice may further adjudge any apprenticed labourer, unlawfully taking possession of such land, to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months, if it should be made to appear to his satisfaction that such possession was taken fraudulently and with knowledge that the party had no lawful claim to such possession.

10. No apprenticed labourer shall quit the Colony except with a passport from the Lieutenant-Governor, which passport shall not be granted except with the written consent of the employer.

11. Any labourer quitting or attempting to quit the Colony without such passport shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months.

12. All persons whose ordinary occupation is on the sea, or on any navigable stream, as fishermen or mariners, shall be registered as such at the office of the special justice of the district; and any apprenticed labourer engaging in such occupation, without being first so registered, shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months.

13. All vessels and boats not registered under the Navigation Acts shall be registered at the office of the special justice of the district, with whom shall be entered the description of the vessel or boat, the name of the owner, and the place at which the same is usually moored.

14. No person shall keep a vessel or boat so registered, except by a license from the Lieutenant-Governor.

15. All licensed owners of such boats or vessels shall be bound to moor them, when not actually afloat, at the place or places mentioned in such license.

16. All unlicensed vessels and boats shall be liable to seizure and confiscation; and all other vessels and boats moored at any place not mentioned in the license shall be liable to detention until the owner thereof shall have paid a fine of not less than 20 s. nor more than 5 l.

17. All persons removing or assisting to remove any apprenticed labourer from the Colony in any boat or vessel, without a passport from the Lieutenant-Governor, shall be liable to a penalty of 50 l., or to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month.

CAP. VIII.—On the Dissolution of the Apprenticeship by Contract or Appraisement.

1. Subject to the regulations hereinafter made, any person, being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Island of Trinidad, may, by his or her last will, or by deed under his or her hand or seal, at his or her pleasure, discharge any such apprenticed labourer, so far as relates to the interest of every such testator or grantor, and that every such discharge shall, shall, as far as relates to the interest of the testator or grantor, as the case may be, but no further, or otherwise, be valid and effectual in the law for the perpetual discharge of any such apprenticed labourer: Provided nevertheless, that no person having a partial or temporary interest in any apprenticed labourer, may, to the extent of such interest, effect his or her discharge, gratuitously, unless all other persons having a partial, future or reversionary interest in such apprenticed labourer, shall consent or be parties to such discharge, or unless such partial, future or reversionary interests shall be purchased in the manner hereinafter provided.

2. And, in order to prevent the fraudulent discharge of apprenticed labourers incompetent from age or disease to earn their own living, it is further ordered, that in case any such deed of discharge shall be executed gratuitously and without any valuable consideration passing to the employer or other person effecting the same, the apprenticed labourer so to be discharged shall, previously to the actual execution of any such deed, appear before the special justice for the district in which the apprenticed labourer is resident; and if it shall appear to the said special justice that such apprenticed labourer is under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or is labouring under any habitual disease or infirmity of mind or body, the employer or person effecting such discharge shall, under his or her hand and seal, execute and deliver to the said special justice a bond to His Majesty in the penal sum of 50 l., with a condition thereunder written for the defeazance thereof, if such apprenticed labourer shall be properly fed, clothed and maintained until the time when the term of apprenticeship would have expired if such discharge had not been made; and no such gratuitous discharge shall be valid and effectual in the law until such bond as aforesaid shall be duly executed.

3. Provided nevertheless, that no such bond as aforesaid shall be required in the case of any discharge by will; but if at the time of the death of the testator, the apprenticed labourer so discharged shall be under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or labouring under any such disease or infirmity as aforesaid, the estste of every such testator shall be liable to, and chargeable with, the maintenance of such apprenticed labourer, as fully as if the said testator had in his or her lifetime executed such bond as aforesaid.

4. And, to prevent ignorant apprenticed labourers effecting the purchase of their discharge from persons unable to make any valid title to the same, it is further ordered and declared, that it is and shall be lawful for any person, being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Colony, to contract with such apprenticed labourer, through the agency of any such special justice as aforesaid, acting for and on behalf of such apprenticed labourer, but not otherwise, for the discharge of the said apprenticed labourer, at a price to be agreed upon between the said employer and the said special justice respectively; and in case of any such contract, it shall be the duty of the said special justice, on behalf of the said apprenticed labourer, to satisfy himself that the person proposing to effect the said discharge has good right and title in the law, and is competent to effect the same; and it shall also be the duty of the said special justice, without fee or reward, to prepare, in every such case, the proper deed of discharge, which shall in all cases be executed in the presence of and attested by the said special justice, or some proper person to be especially appointed by him to be such witness thereto; and every such deed being so executed shall, by such special justice, be enrolled in the Supreme Court of Civil Justice in and for the said Colony of Trinidad, within one calendar month next after the date and execution thereof; and in case any such deed shall not be so enrolled by the said special justice, within the said period of one calendar month, the said special justice shall incur and be liable to the payment of a fine of not less than 10 l. nor more than 50 l.

5. And to provide for the discharge of apprenticed labourers desiring to obtain the same by purchase, in cases where the employers of such apprenticed labourers may be unwilling or unable to contract for such discharge, it is hereby further ordered, that if the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Colony of Trinidad, or any person having any interest in any such apprenticed labourer, shall be unwilling to effect his or her discharge, or shall, by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease or charge upon or interest in such apprenticed labourer being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer; or if the employer, or any other person having a charge upon or interest in any such apprenticed labourer shall be a minor, or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic; or if the real employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall be absent from the said Colony, or shall not be known; or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in the said Colony, wherein the right to the service of such apprenticed labourer shall or may be in controversy; or if the employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall demand, as the price of his or her discharge, a greater sum of money than may appear to the said special justice to be the fair and just value thereof; then, and in each and every of the cases aforesaid, the chief civil judge of the said Colony, on application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer of such apprenticed labourer to appear before him at some convenient time and place to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published by the said special justice in the public Gazette of the said Colony, of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid; and in such notice, all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, either in their own right, or as the agents, guardians, attornies, trustees or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claims.

6. At the time appointed for any such meeting as aforesaid, the chief civil judge of the said Colony, in the presence of the said special justice, and also in the presence of the employer employer of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer, shall proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged by the said special justice, and by the employer, or other persons claiming any interest in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, and attending in pursuance of any such notice; and in case the said parties, or any of them, shall refuse to effect such discharge at a price approved by the said special justice, or in case it shall be made to appear to the said chief civil judge that a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer cannot legally be effected by private contract, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is a minor, or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is absent from the said Colony, or is unknown, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice in such Colony wherein the right to the services of such apprenticed labourer is in controversy, then, and in every such case, the said chief civil judge shall require the special justice and the employer of such apprenticed labourer, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of his or her services for the remainder of such apprenticeship, and the said judge shall himself nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or attending shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said judge shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such employer.

7. The appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid, shall be duly sworn by and before the said chief civil judge, to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the value of the services of the apprenticed labourer so proposed to be discharged, and within seven days next after such their appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the said services, and shall certify such their valuation to the said chief civil judge under their hands and seals; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said judge within the said term of seven days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall within the next succeeding seven days certify his valuation to the said judge; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or in their default by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and enrolled among the records of the Supreme Court of Civil Justice in and for the said Colony.

8. Provided nevertheless, that if it shall be made to appear to the said judge, within one calendar month next after such valuation shall have been made, that in the making thereof the said appraisers or umpire, or any of them, acted fraudulently or unjustly, or under the influence of any improper motive, or under any mistake as to the nature of their or his duty, or under any misapprehension of any material matter of fact, then, but not otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said judge to set aside the said valuation, and to declare the same to be void, and to direct another valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, for which purpose new appraisers and a new umpire shall in manner aforesaid be appointed and sworn, and shall proceed to make a second valuation, which being certified to the said judge in manner aforesaid, shall be to all intents and purposes binding and conclusive: Provided that such second or any subsequent valuation may in like manner be set aside by any such judge on the grounds aforesaid, until a valuation is made not open to any such objection.

9. Provided also, that if the amount of any such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned, within three calendar months next after the enrolment thereof, such enrolment shall be cancelled.

10. Upon or within three calendar months next after the enrolment in the Supreme Court of Justice of the said Colony of any such valuation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any special justice as aforesaid of such Colony, out of any monies to be supplied to him for that purpose, by the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, to pay to the treasurer of the said Colony, the appraised value of the services of such apprenticed labourer, taking a receipt in writing from such treasurer for every such payment; and the chief civil judge of the said Colony shall, upon application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice, make an order for the enrolment in the said Supreme Court of Justice of such receipt, and the said chief judge shall by such order further proceed to declare and adjudge, that the apprenticed labourer, by or on behalf of whom such money hath been paid, is discharged; and such apprenticed labourer shall thereupon be, and be deemed, taken and reputed to be discharged to all intents and purposes from such apprenticeship.

11. The money to arise from the discharge of any apprenticed labourer by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned shall remain in the hands of the public treasurer of the said Colony, and shall bear interest at and after the rate of 5 l. per cent. per annum, and His Majesty's revenue in the said Colony shall, and is hereby declared to be pledged and responsible for the due payment of such principal money and interest; or shall in the discretion of such treasurer be invested in the purchase, in his name, of any public funds or securities of Great Britain and Ireland; and the chief civil judge of the said Colony shall, and he is hereby authorized, upon application to him for that purpose made, to direct that the money in the hands of the said treasurer, and the interest accruing on such money, or the public funds of Great Britain and Ireland so to be purchased as aforesaid, and the dividends payable thereupon, shall be the property of the person or persons who was or were entitled to the services of such discharged apprenticed labourers, and shall be subject and liable to all such and the same uses, trusts, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands of what nature or kind soever, as such services were subject unto at such time time of the discharge of such apprenticed labourer. And the said treasurer shall hold the said money, and the interest accruing thereupon, or the said public funds and dividends, subject to such order as such chief judge of the said Colony may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, and upon notice to all other persons interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make; and such principal money and interest shall by such treasurer be paid and disposed of in pursuance of and in obedience to any such order.

12. It shall and may be lawful for the chief civil judge of the said Colony to make and prescribe, and from time to time to revoke and alter, as occasion may require, all such rules and orders as may be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction hereby in him vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to or interested in any question so depending before him.

Cap. IX.—On the Removal of Prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another.

In every case in which, according to the provisions of the said Act of Parliament, the consent of the justice of the peace shall be necessary for the transfer of any apprenticed labourer from one plantation to another, every such transfer shall be given and attested in the form annexed marked with the letter (O.), and shall within one month after the date thereof be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose by the special justice of the district to which such apprenticed labourer shall belong.

Cap. X.—On the Apprenticeship of Children.

Every indenture of apprenticeship to be made and entered into by any such special justice as aforesaid, in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament, on behalf of any children of any apprenticed labourers, shall be in the form annexed, marked with the letter (P.), and shall be kept and recorded in the office of the special justice for the district to which such apprenticed child may belong.

Cap. XI.—On the Alienation by Sale, Inheritance or Will, of the Services of Apprenticed Labourers.

The right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall, upon the death of any such employer, pass to and become vested in such and the same person or persons as, if the said Act had not been paased, would by will or descent, as the case may be, have been entitled to such apprenticed labourer, as his, her or their slave, and such right or interest shall pass and be transferable, inter vivos, in such manner and form, and under and by virtue of such deeds, instruments and conveyances as slaves have hitherto been transferable, and have passed in the said Island.

Provided always, that no such apprenticed labourer shall be publicly or privately exhibited, or be liable or compelled to attend in person at the time or place of any sale or transfer of his or her services.

Cap. XII.—On the Relation in which the Apprenticed Labourers will stand towards the State.

No apprenticed labourer shall, during the continuance of his or her apprenticeship, be liable or competent to serve His Majesty in any civil office or in any military capacity within the said Colony, or to enjoy or exercise any political franchise therein.

Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt any such apprenticed labourer from the obligation of rendering to His Majesty any service, civil or military, which, in case or in the prospect of any invasion, rebellion, or any great public exigency, may by His Majesty, or by the Lieutenant-Governor for the time being of the said Colony, or by any other lawful authority, be imposed upon him.

Provided also, that nothing herein contained extends or shall be construed to disqualify any such apprenticed labourer from undertaking and discharging any office or employment in the service of any corporate or ecclesiastical body, or of any person or persons, in cases where such employments or offices may not be connected with the discharge of any military or political duties.

St. Lucia.

Copy of ORDER in COUNCIL, dated 5th June 1834, for giving effect in the Island of St. Lucia to the Statute 3d & 4th Will. IV. c. 73. for the Abolition of Slavery.

At the Court of St. James's, the 5th day of June 1834:

Present, The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Whereas by a certain Act of Parliament passed in the third and fourth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things recited, that it is necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for ascertaining, with reference to each apprenticed labourer within the said Colonies respectively, whether he or she belongs to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and for determining the manner and form in which and the solemnities with which the voluntary

tary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such his or her apprenticeship may be effected, and for prescribing the form and manner in which and the solemnities with which the purchase by any such apprenticed labourer or his or her discharge from such apprenticeship without, or in opposition, if necessary, to, the consent of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, shall be effected, and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services shall be made, and how and to whom the amount of such appraisement shall in each case be paid and applied, and in what manner and form and by whom the discharge from any such apprenticeship shall thereupon be given, executed and recorded; and that it is also necessary for the preservation of peace throughout the said Colonies, that proper regulations should be framed and established for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer, and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter for any hired service during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer, and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers, and for the prevention or punishment of vagrancy or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer, and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance of the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourers, and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourers, during their term of apprenticeship, from the Colonies to which they may respectively belong: And that it will also be necessary for the protection of such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid that various regulations should be framed and established in the said respective Colonies for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as they are by the said Act declared entitled to receive, and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles in cases where the laws at present existing in any such Colony may not in the case of slaves have made any regulation or any adequate regulation for that purpose: And that it is also necessary that proper rules should be established for the prevention and punishment of any frauds which might be practised, or of any omissions or neglects which might occur, respecting the quantity or the quality of the supplies so to be furnished, or respecting the periods for the delivery of the same: And that it is necessary, in those cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid may either wholly or in part be raised by themselves by the cultivation of ground to be set apart and allotted for that purpose, that proper regulations should be made and established as to the extent of such grounds, and as to the distance at which such grounds may be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourers, and respecting the deductions to be made from the cultivation of such grounds from the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereinbefore declared liable to labour: And that it may also be necessary, by such regulations as aforesaid, to secure to the said prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment for their own benefit of that portion of their time during which they are not hereby required to labour in the service of their respective employers, and for securing exactness in the computation of the time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereby required to labour in the service of such their respective employers: And that it is also necessary that provision should be made for preventing the imposition of task-work on any such apprenticed labourer without his or her free consent to undertake the same; but that it may be necessary by such regulations in certain cases to require and provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work, which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake: And that it is also necessary that regulations should be made respecting any voluntary contracts into which any apprenticed labourers may enter with their respective employers or with any other person for hired service for any future period, and for limiting the greatest period of time to which such voluntary contract may extend, and for enforcing the punctual and effectual performance of such voluntary contracts on the part both of such apprenticed labourers and of the person or persons engaging for their employment and hire: And that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for the prevention or punishment of any cruelty, injustice or other wrong or injury which may be done to or inflicted upon any such apprenticed labourers by the persons entitled to their services: And that it is also necessary that proper regulations should be made respecting the manner and form in which such indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid shall be made on behalf of such children as aforesaid, and respecting the registering and preservation of all such Indentures: And that it is also necessary that provision should be made for ensuring promptitude and despatch, and for preventing all unnecessary expense, in the discharge by the justices of the peace holding such special commissions as in the said Act mentioned of the jurisdiction and authorities thereby committed to them, and for enabling such justices to decide in a summary way such questions as may be brought before them in that capacity, and for the division of the said respective Colonies into districts for the purposes of such jurisdiction, and for the frequent and punctual visitation by such justices of the peace of the apprenticed labourers within such their respective districts: And that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for indemnifying and protecting such justices of the peace in the upright execution and discharge of their duties; and that such regulations as aforesaid could not without great inconvenience be made except by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or other local legislatures of the said respective Colonies, or by His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council,

ST. LUCIA.

Order in Council. No. 56.

Council, in reference to those Colonies to which the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council extends; it is therefore enacted and declared in and by the said Act, that nothing therein contained extends or shall be construed to extend to prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or by such other local legislatures as aforesaid, or by His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, of any such Acts of General Assembly, or Ordinances, or Orders in Council as may be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into full and complete effect: provided nevertheless, and it is thereby enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any such Governor, Council and Assembly, or for any such local legislature, or for His Majesty in Council, by any such Acts of Assembly, Ordinances, or Orders in Council as aforesaid, to make or establish any enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order which shall be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to the said recited Act or any part thereof, but that every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order shall be and is thereby declared to be absolutely null and void and of no effect.

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the said recited Act of Parliament, and for carrying the same into effect within the Island of St. Lucia, it is hereby ordered by His Majesty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, That the several rules and regulations contained in the twelve chapters hereunto subjoined and annexed, and which twelve chapters are and shall be taken to be part of this present Order, shall extend to and be in force within the Island of St. Lucia and the dependencies thereof, upon, from and after the 1st day of August in this present year 1834.

Cap. I.—On the Judicial and Ministerial Agency to be employed.

1. The Colony of St. Lucia shall be divided into not less than two judicial districts.
2. The Lieutenant-Governor shall by proclamation define, and, as occasion may require, shall alter the limits of such districts.
3. One special justice, at least, shall be appointed to each of the before-mentioned districts.
4. In each district shall be set apart one or more tract or tracts of land, which, with the buildings to be erected thereon, shall be called the Police settlement or Police settlements of the district.
5. Every such police settlement shall be established in the vicinity of as large a body as may be of the population of the district.
6. It shall be lawful for the special justice or special justices of each district to license in such district places of safe custody and correction, situate at convenient distances from each other.
7. The Lieutenant-Governor shall appropriate for the formation of the police settlements any waste lands of the Crown which may be situate conveniently for that purpose; and in districts where such Crown lands cannot be found, shall, by exchange or purchase, procure the lands wanting for the purpose.
8. At the first formation of any such police settlement, the members thereof, assisted by such hired labourers as may be indispensable, shall be employed in the erection of temporary buildings for their own occupation; such buildings to be hereafter superseded by more permanent buildings, to be erected by the means subsequently mentioned.
9. At each police settlement shall be erected a house of correction.
10. Until permanent police settlements shall be formed and the buildings requisite for that purpose erected, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, to procure and provide, by hire or otherwise, suitable buildings, to be occupied temporarily as police settlements.
11. At each police settlement shall also be established a penal gang, to be composed of such persons as shall be condemned to imprisonment with hard labour.
12. Every such police settlement, place of safe custody and correction, shall be placed under the general charge of the special justices of the district, and under the immediate superintendence of a special justice of the district, to be selected by the Lieutenant-Governor for that purpose, and who shall be called a superintending special justice, and shall reside thereat, or in the immediate vicinity thereof.
13. Each police settlement shall consist of no less than one serjeant and five privates, all being able-bodied men, between the ages of 20 and 50 years.
14. The serjeant and privates of each police settlement shall be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor, and shall be liable to be removed by him for bad conduct or inefficiency.
15. The serjeants and privates shall be liable to be suspended from office by the superintending special justice or justices of the district, subject to the Lieutenant-Governor's confirmation or disallowance of such suspension.
16. In addition to the police force stationed at each police settlement, the superintending special justice shall appoint and swear in such persons in their respective districts, as they shall think fit, to act as constables. Nothing herein contained shall prevent an apprenticed labourer from being appointed, sworn in, and acting as a constable.
17. The superintending special justices shall, once in each quarter, respectively make to the Lieutenant-Governor a report of the effective strength and condition of the police force at each settlement; and of the state of the buildings and provision grounds there, and of the state and conduct of the prisoners confined therein.

18. The

18. The Lieutenant-Governor shall, from time to time, by and with the advice of the Legislative Council, frame and publish all necessary rules for the internal discipline of the said police settlements, and of the said places of safe custody and correction; for the clothing, arming, supporting and remunerating the serjeants and privates of the said police; for remunerating the said constables; for securing the due performance, by the said police and constables, of their respective duties; for the employment of the penal gang, and also of the serjeants and privates of the said police, when not engaged in police duties; for the support of the prisoners in the said houses of correction and places of safe custody; for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes; for the classification of prisoners; for their religious instruction; for the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety amongst them; and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules. And all rules so framed and published shall be transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and shall, until disallowed or altered, remain in full force.

19. It shall be the duty of the serjeant and the privates to carry into execution such orders as they shall receive from the special justice, for the prevention or repressing of crimes, and for enforcing obedience to the law, and for inflicting such punishments as are hereby authorized.

CAP. II.—On the Procedure to be observed by the Special Magistrates, in the exercise of their Jurisdiction.

1. Every superintending special justice shall reside within the district to which he is appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed by the Lieutenant-Governor.

2. Every such superintending special justice shall, one day in each week, or oftener if need be, at the place of his residence, hold a session for the hearing and deciding upon such cases as may be brought before him.

3. Every plantation in each district upon which 10 or more apprenticed labourers shall be employed, shall be visited by a superintending or other special justice once in each fortnight, or oftener if need be, who shall there take cognizance of such cases as may be brought before him, whether such cases shall relate to apprenticed labourers employed on that plantation, or to any other apprenticed labourers.

4. Every such special justice shall keep a journal of all the cases brought before him, in which he shall enter, 1st, the date of the complaint; 2dly, the name of the complainant; 3d, the substance of the complaint; 4th, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; 5th, the substance of the evidence; 6th, his decision on the case; 7th, whether the decision has been carried into effect; 8th, any general remarks which he may think desirable.

5. All such journals shall be kept in one uniform manner, to be prescribed for that purpose by the Lieutenant-Governor.

6. At the end of each quarter the special justice shall transmit to the Lieutenant-Governor a duplicate of his journal for the preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereto annexed, to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which the deponent has been engaged as such special justice, during the quarter to which it refers.

7. On receiving any complaint, it shall be the duty of the special justice to reduce it to writing, and to cause it to be read by, or to read it over to the complainant, by whom it shall then be subscribed.

8. If the complaint shall appear to the justice immaterial, and not to deserve further inquiry, he may at once dismiss the complaint; but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the complainant to make oath that the complaint is true.

9. Upon taking any complaint, to the truth of which such oath shall have been so made, the special justice shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged, or shall issue, if necessary, a summons for his attendance, as the case may require. The warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed, marked (A.), and the summons in the form annexed, marked (B.)

10. The warrant of arrest shall be issued in all cases which impute to the party charged a capital or a transportable offence; in all cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged would endeavour to escape; and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay. In all other cases the justice is to proceed in the first instance by summons, if necessary.

11. In cases in which it may be necessary to adduce witnesses in support of, or in answer to any such complaint, the justice shall issue a summons, if necessary, to every such witness, in the annexed form, marked (C.)

12. At the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, the justice shall, in the presence of all parties, or of such of them as being summoned shall attend in pursuance of such summons, first read over the written complaint, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining, and the witnesses, taking down in writing the deposition of each witness, which shall be read over to and signed by him.

13. The justice may, from time to time, adjourn any such proceeding for further inquiry, and if necessary commit the party charged to custody pending such adjournment, or take bail for his appearance. Every such commitment or bail shall be in the annexed forms, marked (D.) and (E.)

14. At the close of such proceedings, the justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, which decision he shall reduce into writing, and subscribe with his hand.

15. By any such decision the justice shall, as law and reason may seem to him to require, either dismiss the complaint, or sanction any lawful compromise between the parties which he may think just, or convict the party charged, or commit him to prison to take his trial for the imputed offence.

16. If the complaint shall be dismissed, the justice shall, in such his written decision, state whether it was so dismissed as being unproved, or as being frivolous and vexatious, or as being malicious.

17. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, the justice may adjudge the complainant, if a labourer, to work in the service of his employer, for any time not exceeding in the whole fifteen extra hours in any one week, or to any number of stripes not exceeding fifteen; or if the complainant be the employer, the justice may adjudge each employer to the payment of a penalty for the use of the labourer, of not less than 10*s.* sterling, and not greater than 5*l.* sterling.

18. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as malicious, it shall be competent to the justice, at the instance of the party charged, to adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to imprisonment with hard labour, for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30; or, if the employer of any such labourer, to a fine not less than 40*s.* sterling, and not greater than 10*l.* sterling, for the benefit of the party charged, which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation or otherwise, in respect of such his complaint.

19. If the justice shall, by such his decision, convict the party charged, or shall convict the complainant of preferring a frivolous and vexatious, or a malicious complaint, such conviction shall be severally drawn up according to the forms annexed, marked (F.) (G.)

20. If such magistrate shall commit the party charged to take his trial for the imputed offence, such commitment shall be drawn up in the form annexed, marked (H.)

21. Upon any such conviction as aforesaid, by such special justice, he shall forthwith issue a warrant for the execution thereof.

22. All summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders, so to be issued by any such justice as aforesaid, shall be executed by the police officers of his district, such justice being nevertheless authorized, as occasion may require, to address the same to any other person or persons jointly with, or instead of, such officers of police as to him may seem requisite.

23. Any summons, warrant or order issued by any such special justice within his own district, may, without any further authority, be carried into execution in any part of the Colony, though beyond such district.

24. If any person, summoned by any such justice as a witness, shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or appearing, shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him by such justice, in relation to the matters depending before him, it shall be lawful for such justice to issue his warrant for the arrest of any such defaulter, or to commit him to close custody, there to remain until he shall submit to be so sworn and examined, and to make such answers as aforesaid. Every such warrant of arrest, or commitment, shall be in the forms annexed, marked (I.) and (K.)

25. If it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant-Governor and Legislative Council, that the forms of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed are needlessly burdensome upon the justices of the several districts within the Colony, or of any one or more of such districts; or that they impede or interfere with the prompt and effective execution of the law, the Lieutenant-Governor, with advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall be entitled to suspend any part of the preceding rules relating to such procedure, or to adapt the same to the circumstances of the case, so as more effectually to promote the punctual, orderly and effective execution of the law; and for that purpose to frame and publish rules and ordinances, which shall be transmitted for His Majesty's confirmation, and which, until disallowed, shall be in full force.

26. It shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor to assign to such one or more of the special justices as he shall select for that purpose, the following duties; (namely) to examine into the quarterly journals hereby directed to be transmitted by the special justices to the Lieutenant-Governor; to visit the judicial districts throughout the whole or any part of the Colony, and to inspect the police settlements and places of safe custody and correction belonging to such districts; and to examine into the state of the police force, and of the prisoners in the houses of correction and places of safe custody, and of the penal gangs in such districts, and generally to ascertain how far the rules hereby established, or to be established, under the provisions herein contained, are duly observed, and to report to the Lieutenant-Governor, at such times and in such manner as the Lieutenant-Governor shall direct, upon the several matters aforesaid.

27. If any suit or action shall be commenced against any special justice, in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done by virtue and in pursuance thereof; and if the court shall give judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff shall, by such judgment, be condemned to pay treble costs of suit.

28. If in any such suit or action such justice shall, at any time before final judgment, tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred; and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept such amends and costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court at the trial of such suit, that such amends have been so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff in the amount of the sum so tendered, subject nevertheless to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the defendant.

29. No suit or action shall be brought against any such justice in respect of any matter or thing by him done under or in pursuance hereof, unless the same shall be commenced within six months after the cause of action occurred.

CAP. III.—On the Division of Apprenticed Labourers into their respective Classes.

1. By a day to be appointed for that purpose, the registrar of slaves shall deliver to every owner of slaves, a list of the slaves appearing in the registry to belong to him; for which a fee of two shillings only shall be charged.

2. By a time to be fixed for the purpose, every such owner of slaves shall return such list to the registrar, distinguishing in reference to each slave therein mentioned to which of the three classes he belongs.

3. To every such return shall be annexed an affidavit to the effect that the distinctions therein made correspond with the occupations usually pursued for twelve months next preceding the date of the Act by each of the slaves to whom such returns may refer.

4. If in any case the registrar shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of the return, he shall appoint a time and place at which the owner shall attend him to substantiate the accuracy of such return.

5. At the time and place so to be appointed the person to whom such notice shall be addressed shall attend such registrar, and if required shall bring with him any slave respecting whom any such doubt may have arisen.

6. The registrar shall then proceed to examine the person making such return, and the slave respecting whom such doubt has arisen, and any witnesses who may be adduced respecting the truth of such return; and may if necessary adjourn such examination from time to time.

7. The registrar shall then either confirm or correct any such return as he may see fit, giving notice to the party making such return, and to the slaves respectively, of such his decision.

8. If either the party making such return, or the slave to whom it may refer, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar, such party may on his own behalf, and the registrar may on the behalf of such slave, apply to the chief or to any other judge of the superior court in such Colony by petition, setting forth the nature of such decision and the objections thereto.

9. The judge to whom any such petition may be preferred shall proceed in a summary way to hear and to decide upon the same, and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

10. The judges of the said court shall make all necessary rules for regulating the proceedings upon every such petition in the manner which may be most conducive to method, punctuality and despatch.

11. When such proceedings as aforesaid shall have taken place, there shall be affixed to the entry of the name of each prædial attached slave in the registry the letters P. A.; of each prædial unattached slave the letters P. U.; and of each non-prædial slave the letters N. P.

12. During the continuance of the apprenticeship the slave registry so corrected as aforesaid shall be deposited amongst the records of the superior courts of the Colony; and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such corrected registry, or a certified extract thereof, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the fact.

13. Any person neglecting or omitting to make the return or the affidavit before-mentioned, or to attend the registrar when summoned by him for that purpose, shall incur a penalty of not more than 10 l. nor less than 20 s.; and in the event of the wilful absence of any such person, it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed and to decide any such question as though such party had attended.

CAP. IV.—On the Maintenance of the Apprenticed Labourers.

1. It shall be the duty of every employer of prædial apprenticed labourers, within the third week of the month of September of each year, to deliver, or cause to be delivered to the special justice of the district in which such prædial apprenticed labourers are resident, a written declaration in the form annexed, marked (L.), specifying whether it is the intention of such employer, during the current year, to maintain his prædial apprenticed labourers by the cultivation of ground, to be to them appropriated for that purpose, or by an allowance of provisions.

2. That every employer who shall, by such declaration as aforesaid, propose to maintain his prædial apprenticed labourers by an allowance of provisions, shall be and is hereby bound and required to supply to such prædial apprenticed labourers such amount of provisions, and of such kind, as by the clause next hereinafter contained are directed to be supplied to non-prædial apprenticed labourers above the age of ten years.

3. Every employer shall be, and is hereby bound and required to maintain his non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and also his prædial apprenticed labourers, until such written declaration shall have been so made and delivered by him as aforesaid, by an allowance of provisions, and to supply such provisions to the amount and of the kinds following; that is to say, each and every apprenticed labourer, above the age of ten years, shall receive in each week not less than seven herrings or shads, or other salted provisions equal thereto, together with 21 pints of wheat-flour, or of the flour or meal of Guinea, or Indian corn, or 56 full-grown plantains, or 56 pounds of cocoas or yams; or, in lieu of the allowances hereinbefore mentioned, the allowances following; namely, four pots of manioc-flour or farine, and two pounds and one half-pound of salt-fish, or fresh, or salt meat, in every week, and to all apprenticed labourers under the age of 10 years, one half of the above allowances.

4. All provisions so to be supplied to the apprenticed labourers in the Colony of St. Lucia, shall be sound and fit for consumption, and of good average merchantable quality.

5. The apprenticed labourers to whom such provisions shall be supplied, shall also be provided by and at the expense of their employers, with the means of preserving the same from week to week, and of properly preparing the same for human food.

6. Every employer of prædial apprenticed labourers, who shall by such declaration as aforesaid propose to maintain such prædial apprenticed labourers by the appropriation of ground, to be by them cultivated for that purpose, shall be and is hereby bound and required to set apart for every prædial apprenticed labourer so to be maintained half an acre of land, properly adapted for the growth of provisions, and not more than two miles distant from the place of residence of such prædial apprenticed labourer.

7. Every such employer shall be and is hereby bound and required to supply every prædial apprenticed labourer, for whom any such ground shall be so appropriated, with such seeds and with such implements of husbandry as may be necessary for the cultivation of such ground, on the first entering of such prædial apprenticed labourer in the occupation thereof.

8. It shall not be lawful for any person whomsoever to dispossess any prædial apprenticed labourer of any land so cultivated by him or her, until such labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground.

9. The crops, when growing upon any such ground and when severed therefrom, shall and are hereby declared to be the sole and absolute property of the prædial apprenticed labourer, for and in respect of whom such ground shall have been appropriated and set apart.

10. Every prædial apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated and set apart for his support shall, out of the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourer is by the said recited Act required to labour, after the rate of 45 hours per week as aforesaid, be allowed such number of hours, not being fewer than four hours and a half per week, and not being more than seven hours and a half per week, as the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall, by rules to be framed for that purpose, determine; which rules shall be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and until disallowed or altered shall remain in full force.

11. If any employer of prædial apprenticed labourers within the said Colony of St. Lucia shall neglect or omit to sign and deliver, in manner and within the time hereinbefore mentioned such written declaration as aforesaid, he or she shall incur a penalty of 2 l. for such omission or neglect, in respect of the first week in which the same shall occur, with additional penalties of 4 l. in the second week, 6 l. in the third week, and so on in arithmetical progression, in respect of each additional week during which such neglect shall be continued; and if any employer or manager of apprenticed labourers shall not supply to such apprenticed labourers provisions of such amount and quality, and at such times as he is hereinbefore required to supply the same, or shall not provide such apprenticed labourers with the means of preserving such provisions from week to week, or with the means of properly preparing the same for human food, every employer shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the value of the provisions which ought so to have been supplied, or for the preservation and preparation of which such means as aforesaid ought to have been provided, which last-mentioned penalties shall accrue to, and be for the benefit of the apprenticed labourers injured by any such omission or neglect; and if any such employer of prædial labourers shall not set apart for every prædial apprenticed labourer who is maintained by the cultivation of ground, such land of such quality and quantity, and so situate as hereinbefore is required, or shall neglect or omit to supply any such prædial apprenticed labourer with such seeds and implements of husbandry as aforesaid, or shall dispossess any such prædial apprenticed labourer of any land by him or her cultivated, until such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted, and growing upon such ground, every person so offending shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the amount of the loss sustained by every such prædial apprenticed labourer by every such act, omission or neglect, which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the prædial apprenticed labourer so injured; and if any such employer of prædial apprenticed labourers shall neglect or omit to allow to any prædial apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated, such number of hours as aforesaid in each week for the cultivation thereof, every person so offending shall for each and every such offence incur a distinct and separate penalty of 10 s., which shall go and be applied to and for the benefit of the prædial apprenticed labourers injured thereby, the number of such penalties being equal to the number of prædial apprenticed labourers affected by such offence, multiplied by the number of the days on which such offences may have been repeated.

12. It is and shall be the duty of every employer of apprenticed labourers within the said Colony once, that is to say, either in the month of January or in the month of June in each year, and he or she is hereby required to deliver to every such apprenticed labourer for his or her use either in the month of January, or in the month of June in each and every year, the following articles, that is to say:—

To

To every male apprenticed labourer of the age of 15 years and upwards,—

One hat of chip, straw or felt, or other more durable material, or one Kilmarnock cap; one cloth jacket, or blue baize or penisten frock, or seaman's shirt; two cotton or linen check-shirts; two pairs of osnaburgh trowsers; and one blanket.

To every female apprenticed labourer of the age of 13 years and upwards,—

One chip or straw hat, or two checked cotton handkerchiefs; one blue baize or penisten frock or wrapper; two cotton or linen check shifts; two osnaburgh petticoats; one blanket; and one pair of scissars.

To every male apprenticed labourer under the age of fifteen years,—

One hat or cap as aforesaid; one cloth jacket, or blue baize or penisten frock, or seaman's shirt; one checked linen or cotton shirt; and one pair of osnaburgh trowsers.

And to every female under the age of thirteen years,—

One chip or straw hat, or two checked cotton handkerchiefs; one blue baize or penisten frock or wrapper; one check shift, and one osnaburgh petticoat.

13. All the articles so to be supplied to such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall be of good average merchantable quality.

14. If any employer of apprenticed labourers in the said Colony shall neglect or omit, within the time or times hereinbefore for that purpose limited, to supply and deliver to and for the use of any apprenticed labourer under his or her management, such articles of clothing and household furniture as are hereinbefore referred to, the person so offending shall incur and become liable to a fine equal to twice the value of the article or articles so withholden, which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the apprenticed labourer injured by such neglect.

15. Every employer of apprenticed labourers within the said Colony shall be and is hereby required to supply each and every apprenticed labourer under his or her management with a wooden or iron bedstead, or with boards so arranged as to enable every such apprenticed labourer to sleep during the night at an elevation of one foot, at the least, above the ground; and every employer who shall neglect or omit so to supply any such apprenticed labourer with such bedstead, or such means of sleeping above the ground as aforesaid, shall for every such neglect or omission incur and become liable to a fine of 5*s.* in respect of each and every apprenticed labourer, which fine shall be again incurred from week to week as long as such neglect or omission shall continue.

16. Every person in the said Colony being the employer of 40 apprenticed labourers or upwards, shall and is hereby required to engage a medical practitioner to visit such apprenticed labourers in such his medical capacity once at the least in each 14 days; and it shall be the duty of such medical practitioner, and he is hereby authorized and required, to keep a journal of the health of such body of apprenticed labourers, so placed under his medical superintendence, in which journal he shall, once in each 14 days, record what is the general state of health of such body of apprenticed labourers, and shall also enter the name of each apprenticed labourer then labouring under sickness, distinguishing such apprenticed labourers as are thereby disqualified for the ordinary amount of labour, and prescribing such medicines or articles of diet as may in his judgment be necessary for the restoration of the sick; and it shall be the duty of every such medical practitioner once in each fortnight to deliver a copy of the entries so made by him in his journal to the employer of such apprenticed labourers, which employer shall be and is hereby required to supply such apprenticed labourers with such medicines or nourishments, and to allow to such apprenticed labourers such relaxations of labour as may by such medical practitioner be so recommended and prescribed; and in reference to every apprenticed labourer for whom any such nourishment may be provided, the rules hereinbefore contained respecting the food of apprenticed labourers shall be and are hereby suspended; and every such medical practitioner shall and is hereby required, in obedience to any requisition to him for that purpose made in writing by any such superintending special justice, to produce to such justice his journal; and in case of any acute or dangerous disease of any apprenticed labourer, the employer of such apprenticed labourer shall and is hereby required to employ at his own costs and charges, a medical practitioner for the care and medical treatment of such apprenticed labourer.

17. If any such employer of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid in the said Colony, or if any such medical practitioner as aforesaid shall refuse, neglect or omit to do or perform any matter or thing which such employer or medical practitioner is hereby required to do and perform in and about the engagement of such practitioner, or in or about the keeping such journal as aforesaid, or in or about the medical treatment, nourishment or temporary relaxation of labour of any apprenticed labourer, or in or about the production, when thereunto required, of any such journal as aforesaid, the person so offending shall, for and in respect of every such offence, incur and become liable to a fine of not less than 2*l.* or more than 20*l.*

18. Every apprenticed labourer who, on account of any disease, the medical practitioner shall deem it necessary to confine to the hospital, or to any apartment thereof for the purpose of cure, shall be bound, and if necessary may be compelled to submit to such hospital regulations as shall be sanctioned by a superintending special justice of the district in which such apprenticed labourer shall be resident.

ST. LUCIA.

Appendix (B.)

Order in Council. No. 56.

CAP. V.—On the Duties to be performed by the Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their non-performance.

1. As regards the apportionment of the 45 hours per week, during which prædial apprenticed labourers are required by law to work for their employers, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, to make such regulations in respect thereof, as may appear to them best adapted to promote the interests both of the apprenticed labourers and their employers, and to frame and publish rules and ordinances for that purpose, which shall be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and which until disallowed or altered, shall remain in full force.

2. Subject to the provision lastly hereinbefore contained, and subject also to the deduction of the time hereinbefore directed to be allowed to prædial apprenticed labourers for the cultivation of their provision-grounds, every prædial apprenticed labourer shall be bound and obliged to work and labour for seven hours and a half in each and every day in the year (Sundays and holidays hitherto allowed by law to the labouring population excepted) in the service and for the benefit of his employer.

3. For every hour in which any labourer shall absent himself from his employer's service without reasonable cause, he shall be compelled to serve two extra hours, and so in proportion for every portion of time greater or less than an hour, provided that such extra hours shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week.

4. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for more than seven and a half hours in any one week, shall be adjudged a deserter.

5. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for two days during one week, shall be adjudged a vagabond.

6. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for more than six days in any one week, shall be adjudged a runaway.

7. The reaonableness of the cause of absence shall, in each case, be decided by the special justice.

8. Apprenticed labourers adjudged deserters shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; those adjudged vagabonds, to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, and to any number of stripes not exceeding fifteen; those adjudged runaways, to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 30.

9. Any apprenticed labourer convicted of performing his work indolently, carelessly, or negligently, shall, for the first offence, be adjudged to labour in his employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week; or in case such labourer be a non-prædial labourer, to whipping not exceeding 15 stripes; for the second offence, if within two calendar months, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; for the third, or any subsequent offence, if within two calendar months of the first offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one fortnight, with whipping not exceeding 20 stripes.

10. Any labourer who by the careless use of fire shall wilfully endanger the property of his employer or any other person, or who shall wantonly injure the property of his employer intrusted to his care, or who shall ill use the cattle or other live stock of his employer, or who shall by wilful negligence expose his employer's property to any damage or injury, shall for such offence be adjudged, in the discretion of the justice, either to extra labour in his employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30 lashes, or to any two of such punishments: provided that this enactment shall not exempt any such labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him or her done or omitted, although no such labourer shall be liable to be so sued or prosecuted, both under this order and under such general law as aforesaid.

11. Any apprenticed labourer who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his employer shall be liable to any one or any two of the punishments last aforesaid.

12. Any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employers shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be adjudged to confinement to hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, with whipping not exceeding 39 stripes.

13. Any three or more labourers who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, shall, on conviction, be adjudged to the punishments last aforesaid, or any one of them.

14. Any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself in an insolent and insubordinate manner towards his employer or any person in the immediate superintendence of his labour, shall, for every such offence, be liable on conviction to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping not exceeding 15 stripes.

15. Provided always, that no woman shall be subject to be punished by whipping for any offence by her committed; but that in all cases aforesaid in which that punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying to the case of males only, and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any such male offender, shall, when committed by females, be punished by confinement in the stocks. The stocks to be employed for that purpose shall all be according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the Lieutenant-Governor; and no female shall for any offence by her committed be confined in the stocks after sunset sunset or before sunrise, or for more than eight hours in the whole for any one day, or for more than two days consecutively, or for more than six days on the whole for any one offence.

16. All the offences aforesaid shall be inquired of by the magistrates having special commissions, and not by any other justice of the peace. But any such special magistrate may, if he shall see occasion, refer any such case for trial to the superior court of the Colony.

CAP. VI.—On the Duties to be performed by the Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers; and the Penalties for their non-performance.

1. If the employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall, by force or fraud, protract the weekly services of such labourer beyond the period by law allowed for that purpose, he shall forfeit, for the benefit of such labourer, the sum of one shilling in respect of every hour which such service shall be protracted.

2. It shall be the duty of every such employer to intimate to the labourers in his employment, the commencement and the close of the legal hours of labour; for which purpose, a signal shall be given in such manner as shall, in reference to each plantation, have been previously approved by the special justice of the district.

3. No apprenticed labourer shall be bound to undertake any task-work, except with his own free assent to the same, save as hereinafter is excepted.

4. Every contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any specific work as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall, by such employer, be reduced into writing, and entered in a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation; which book it shall be the duty of the special justice to inspect, as often as he shall in manner aforesaid repair to the several plantations within his district.

5. No contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any such specific or task-work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure or continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of 14 days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties, in the presence and with the approbation of such special justice of the peace, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him, before the expiration of such 14 days. And every such approbation of any such contract shall, by such special justice, be attested under his hand in the book so to be kept as aforesaid.

6. It shall be the duty of the special justice, before approving any such contract, to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same; and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust.

7. In every such contract for task-work, or for extra service extending beyond the period of one fortnight, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed.

8. No contract for such extra service as aforesaid shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

9. Upon proof being made, to the satisfaction of such special justice, of the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra services, it shall be competent to such justice, and he is hereby authorized to award execution against such employer for the amount of such consideration; and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such award, to issue an attachment against the produce, utensils and other chattels upon such plantation, which execution and award shall be respectively in the forms annexed, marked (M.) and (N.)

10. Such execution and attachment as aforesaid shall be executed by the serjeant of the police of the district, who shall thereunder seize and sell so much of the produce, utensils and other chattels as may be found upon such plantation, as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, delivering over the surplus, if any, to such employer.

11. Any apprenticed labourer violating the terms of such contract as aforesaid, for task-work or for extra service, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation, by any such labourer, of the duties to be by him performed in the discharge of the services owing by him by law to such his employer, unless specific penalties are named in the contract.

12. Every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid for task-work or for extra service.

13. If any employer of any apprenticed labourer, or any person who, as manager or otherwise, exercises the authority of the employer over any apprenticed labourer, shall whip, beat, imprison, confine in the stocks, or otherwise maltreat any such apprenticed labourer, or shall, by way of punishment, commit any assault upon his person, such employer or other person shall incur a penalty, to be imposed by such special justice as aforesaid, not exceeding 5*l.*, with imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, in default of the payment of such fine.

14. In any such case as last aforesaid, it shall be competent to any such apprenticed labourer, instead of preferring his complaint to such special justice, to maintain any civil suit or action, as in the case of any other free person, for damages for such assault; and it shall also be competent to such special justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit the offender to take his trial for such offence, before any court having jurisdiction in the premises. If any such employer or other person shall be convicted before any court of competent jurisdiction, of any cruelty towards his apprenticed labourer, or if any such employer or other person shall be twice convicted of inflicting any corporal punishment, or of making any assault upon the person of any such labourer, then the labourer may be discharged from his apprenticeship, by order of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

CAP. VII.—On Offences which may be committed by the Apprenticed Labourers against the State, and the Punishment of such Offences.

1. If any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace, who shall be present at the same, shall cause a flag, or some other conspicuous signal, to be exhibited as a warning to all persons there present to separate and disperse quietly.

2. All persons who, at the expiration of 10 minutes from the exhibition of such flag or signal, shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall, on conviction, be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding 12 months.

3. No prædial attached apprenticed labourer shall reside beyond the limits of the plantation on which he may be resident on the 1st of August next, unless either by the authority of his employer, or with the consent in writing of the special justice of such district.

4. Every labourer found in any place more than five miles distant from his residence, except in his way to or from some place of public worship, and not having with him a written pass for that purpose from his employer, or from the special justice of the district, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained, and brought before a special justice; and unless such labourer shall make it appear, to the satisfaction of such special justice, that he or she, when so found, was employed upon his or her lawful occasions, such labourer shall, on conviction, be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly.

5. If it shall be made to appear, to the satisfaction of any special justice, that any apprenticed labourers have, without lawful authority, established themselves in any part of the Colony as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon them by law, such justice of the peace shall cause any such community to be dislodged, and, if necessary, shall also cause their habitations to be taken down and removed.

6. Any labourer convicted of having been a member of any such community, shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months, and, if a male, to whipping, by any number of stripes not exceeding 39.

7. If any labourer shall, without lawful authority, enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty, or to any other person, it shall be lawful for any special justice to dispossess such labourer from such land, and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same, with all crops growing thereupon, to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not, within one month after such seizure, appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the special justice shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon to be sold, and the proceeds of such sales to be paid over to the public treasurer of the Colony.

8. The summary process aforesaid shall not be taken in any case where any such apprenticed labourer may have been for two years in the undisturbed possession of any such land.

9. The special justice may further adjudge any apprenticed labourer, unlawfully taking possession of such land, to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months, if it should be made to appear, to his satisfaction, that such possession was taken fraudulently, and with knowledge that the party had no lawful claim to such possession.

10. No apprenticed labourer shall quit the Colony except with a passport from the Lieutenant-Governor, which passport shall not be granted except with the written consent of the employer.

11. Any labourer quitting or attempting to quit the Colony without such passport, shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months.

12. All persons whose ordinary occupation is on the sea, or on any navigable stream as fishermen or mariners, shall be registered as such at the office of the special justice of the district; and any apprenticed labourer engaging in such occupation, without being first so registered, shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months.

13. All vessels and boats not registered under the Navigation Acts, shall be registered at the office of the special justice of the district, with whom shall be entered the description of the vessel or boat, the name of the owner, and the place at which the same is usually moored.

14. No person shall keep a vessel or boat so registered, except by a license from the Lieutenant-Governor.

15. All licensed owners of such boats or vessels shall be bound to moor them, when not actually afloat, at the place or places mentioned in such license.

16. All unlicensed vessels and boats shall be liable to seizure and confiscation; and all other vessels and boats moored at any place not mentioned in the license, shall be liable to detention detention until the owner thereof shall have paid a fine of not less than 20*s.*, nor more than 5*l.*

17. All persons removing, or assisting to remove any apprenticed labourer from the Colony, in any boat or vessel, without a passport from the Lieutenant-Governor, shall be liable to a penalty of 50*l.*, or to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month.

CAP. VIII.—On the Dissolution of the Apprenticeship by Contract or Appraisement.

1. Subject to the regulations hereinafter made, any person, being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Island of St. Lucia, may, by his or her last will, or by deed under his or her hand or seal, at his or her pleasure, discharge any such apprenticed labourer, so far as relates to the interest of every such testator or grantor, and that every such discharge shall, as far as relates to the interest of the testator or grantor, as the case may be, but no further, or otherwise be valid and effectual in the law, for the perpetual discharge of any such apprenticed labourer: provided nevertheless, that no person, having a partial or temporary interest in any apprenticed labourer, may, to the extent of such interest, effect his or her discharge gratuitously, unless all other persons, having a partial, future or reversionary interest in such apprenticed labourer, shall consent or be parties to such discharge, or unless such partial, future or reversionary interests shall be purchased in the manner hereinafter provided.

2. And, in order to prevent the fraudulent discharge of apprenticed labourers, incompetent from age or disease to earn their own living, it is further ordered, that in case any such deed of discharge shall be executed gratuitously, and without any valuable consideration passing to the employer or other person effecting the same, the apprenticed labourer so to be discharged shall, previously to the actual execution of any such deed, appear before the special justice for the district in which the apprenticed labourer is resident; and if it shall appear to the said special justice that such apprenticed labourer is under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or is labouring under any habitual disease or infirmity of mind or body, the employer or person effecting such discharge shall, under his or her hand and seal, execute and deliver to the said special justice a bond to His Majesty, in the penal sum of 50*l.*, with a condition thereunder written for the defeazance thereof, if such apprenticed labourer shall be properly fed, clothed and maintained until the time when the term of apprenticeship would have expired, if such discharge had not been made; and no such gratuitous discharge shall be valid and effectual in the law, until such bond as aforesaid shall be duly executed.

3. Provided nevertheless, that no such bond as aforesaid shall be required in the case of any discharge by will; but if at the time of the death of the testator, the apprenticed labourer so discharged shall be under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or labouring under any such disease or infirmity as aforesaid, the estate of every such testator shall be liable to, and chargeable with, the maintenance of such apprenticed labourer, as fully as if the said testator had, in his or her life-time, executed such bond as aforesaid.

4. And, to prevent ignorant apprenticed labourers effecting the purchase of their discharge from persons unable to make any valid title to the same, it is further ordered and declared, that it is and shall be lawful for any person, being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Colony, to contract with such apprenticed labourer, through the agency of any such special justice as aforesaid, acting for and on behalf of such apprenticed labourer, but not otherwise, for the discharge of the said apprenticed labourer, at a price to be agreed upon between the said employer and the said special justice respectively; and in case of any such contract, it shall be the duty of the said special justice, on behalf of the said apprenticed labourer, to satisfy himself that the person proposing to effect the said discharge has good right and title in the law, and is competent to effect the same; and it shall also be the duty of the said special justice, without fee or reward, to prepare, in every such case, the proper deed of discharge, which shall in all cases be executed in the presence of and attested by the said special justice, or some proper person to be especially appointed by him to be such witness thereto; and every such deed being so executed shall, by such special justice, be enrolled in the supreme court of civil justice in and for the said Colony of St. Lucia, within one calendar month next after the date and execution thereof; and in case any such deed shall not be so enrolled by the said special justice, within the said period of one calendar month, the said special justice shall incur and be liable to the payment of a fine of not less than 10*l.*, nor more than 50*l.*

5. And to provide for the discharge of apprenticed labourers desiring to obtain the same by purchase, in cases where the employers of such apprenticed labourers may be unwilling or unable to contract for such discharge, it is hereby further ordered, that if the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Colony of St. Lucia, or any person having any interest in any such apprenticed labourer, shall be unwilling to effect his or her discharge, or shall, by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease or charge upon, or interest in such apprenticed labourer being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer; or if the employer, or any other person having a charge upon, or interest in, any such apprenticed labourer, shall be a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic; or if the real employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall be absent from the said Colony, or shall not be known; or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in the said Colony, wherein the right to the service of such apprenticed labourer shall or may be in controversy; or if the employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall demand, as the price of his or her discharge, a greater sum of money than may appear to the said special justice to be the fair and just value thereof; then and in each and every of the cases aforesaid, the chief civil judge of the said Colony, on application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer of such apprenticed labourer to appear before him at some convenient time and place to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published by the said special justice in the public Gazette of the said Colony, of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid; and in such notice, all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, either in their own right, or as the agents, guardians, attornies, trustees, or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claims.

6. At the time appointed for any such meeting as aforesaid, the chief civil judge of the said Colony, in the presence of the said special justice, and also in the presence of the employer of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer, shall proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged by the said special justice, and by the employer, or other persons claiming any interest in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, and attending in pursuance of any such notice; and in case the said parties, or any of them, shall refuse to effect such discharge at a price approved by the said special justice, or in case it shall be made to appear to the said chief civil judge that a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer cannot legally be effected by private contract, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon, or interest in, the services of such apprenticed labourer, is absent from the said Colony, or is unknown, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice in such Colony wherein the right to the services of such apprenticed labourer is in controversy, then, and in every such case, the said chief civil judge shall require the special justice and the employer of such apprenticed labourer, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of his or her services for the remainder of such apprenticeship, and the said judge shall himself nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or attending shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said judge shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such employer.

7. The appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid, shall be duly sworn by and before the said chief civil judge, to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the value of the services of the apprenticed labourer so proposed to be discharged, and within seven days next after such their appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the said services, and shall certify such their valuation to the said chief civil judge under their hand sand seals; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said judge within the said term of seven days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall within the next succeeding seven days certify his valuation to the said judge; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or in their default by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and enrolled among the records of the supreme court of civil justice in and for the said Colony.

8. Provided nevertheless, that if it shall be made to appear to the said judge, within one calendar month next after such valuation shall have been made, that in the making thereof the said appraisers or umpire, or any of them, acted fraudulently or unjustly, or under the influence of any improper motive, or under any mistake as to the nature of their or his duty, or under any misapprehension of any material matter of fact, then, but not otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said judge to set aside the said valuation, and to declare the same to be void, and to direct another valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, for which purpose new appraisers and a new umpire shall in manner aforesaid be appointed and sworn, and shall proceed to make a second valuation, which being certified to the said judge in manner aforesaid, shall be to all intents and purposes binding and conclusive: provided that such second or any subsequent valuation may in like manner be set aside by any such judge on the grounds aforesaid, until a valuation is made not open to any such objection.

9. Provided also, that if the amount of any such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned, within three calendar months next after the enrolment thereof, such enrolment shall be cancelled.

10. Upon or within three calendar months next after the enrolment in the supreme court of justice of the said Colony of any such valuation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any special justice as aforesaid of such Colony out of any monies to be supplied to him for that purpose, by the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, to pay to the treasurer of the said Colony, the appraised value of the services of such apprenticed labourer, taking a receipt in writing from such treasurer for every such payment; and the chief civil judge of the said Colony shall, upon application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice, make an order for the enrolment in the said supreme court of justice of such receipt, and the said chief judge shall by such order further proceed to declare and adjudge, that the apprenticed labourer, by or on behalf of whom such money hath been paid, is discharged; and such apprenticed labourer shall thereupon be, and be deemed, taken and reputed to be discharged to all intents and purposes from such apprenticeship.

11. The

11. The money to arise from the discharge of any apprenticed labourer by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned shall remain in the hands of the public treasurer of the said Colony, and shall bear interest at and after the rate of 5 l. per cent. per annum, and His Majesty's revenue in the said Colony shall, and is hereby declared to be pledged and responsible for the due payment of such principal money and interest; or shall in the discretion of such treasurer be invested in the purchase, in his name, of any public funds or securities of Great Britain and Ireland; and the chief civil judge of the said Colony shall, and he is hereby authorized, upon application to him for that purpose made, to direct that the money in the hands of the said treasurer, and the interest accruing on such money, or the public funds of Great Britain and Ireland so to be purchased as aforesaid, and the dividends payable thereupon, shall be the property of the person or persons who was or were entitled to the services of such discharged apprenticed labourers, and shall be subject and liable to all such and the same uses, trusts, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands of what nature or kind soever, as such services were subject unto at such time of the discharge of such apprenticed labourer. And the said treasurer shall hold the said money, and the interest accruing thereupon, or the said public funds and dividends, subject to such order as such chief judge of the said Colony may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, and upon notice to all other persons interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make; and such principal money and interest shall by such treasurer be paid and disposed of in pursuance of, and in obedience to, any such order.

12. It shall and may be lawful for the chief civil judge of the said Colony to make and prescribe, and from time to time to revoke and alter, as occasion may require, all such rules and orders as may be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction hereby in him vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to or interested in any question so depending before him.

CAP. IX.—On the Removal of prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another.

In every case in which, according to the provisions of the said Act of Parliament, the consent of the justice of the peace shall be necessary for the transfer of any apprenticed labourer from one plantation to another, every such transfer shall be given and attested in the form annexed marked with the letter (O.) and shall within one month after the date thereof be recorded in a book, to be kept for that purpose by the special justice of the district to which such apprenticed labourer shall belong.

CAP. X.—On the Apprenticeship of Children.

Every indenture of apprenticeship to be made and entered into by any such special justice as aforesaid, in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament, on behalf of any children of any apprenticed labourers, shall be in the form annexed, marked with the letter (P.), and shall be kept and recorded in the office of the special justice for the district to which such apprenticed child may belong.

CAP. XI.—On the Alienation by Sale, Inheritance or Will, of the Services of Apprenticed Labourers.

The right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall, upon the death of any such employer, pass to and become vested in such and the same person or persons as, if the said Act had not been passed, would by will or descent, as the case may be, have been entitled to such apprenticed labourer, as his, her or their slave; and such right or interest shall pass and be transferrable, inter vivos, in such manner and form, and under and by virtue of such deeds, instruments and conveyances as slaves have hitherto been transferrable, and have passed in the said Island.

Provided always, that no such apprenticed labourer shall be publicly or privately exhibited, or be liable or compelled to attend in person at the time or place of any sale or transfer of his or her services.

CAP. XII.—On the Relation in which the Apprenticed Labourers will stand towards the State.

No apprenticed labourer shall, during the continuance of his or her apprenticeship, be liable or competent to serve His Majesty in any civil office, or in any military capacity, within the said Colony, or to enjoy or exercise any political franchise therein.

Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt any such apprenticed labourer from the obligation of rendering to His Majesty any service, civil or military, which, in case or in the prospect of any invasion, rebellion or any great public exigency, may, by His Majesty, or by the Lieutenant-Governor for the time being of the said Colony, or by any other lawful authority, be imposed upon him.

ST. LUCIA.
Order in Council. No. 56.

Provided also, that nothing herein contained extends, or shall be construed to disqualify any such apprenticed labourer from undertaking and discharging any office or employment in the service of any corporate or ecclesiastical body, or of any person or persons, in cases where such employments or offices may not be connected with the discharge of any military or political duties.

By his Excellency Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, Knight, Lieutenant-Governor, &c.

Dudley Hill, Lieutenant-Governor.

A PROCLAMATION dividing the Island of St. Lucia into three Judicial Districts, and defining the Limits of the said Districts.

Whereas by an Order of The King's most ExcellentMajesty in his Privy Council, bearing date the 5th day of June 1834, certain rules and regulations have been framed and established for carrying into full and complete effect within this Island of St. Lucia, an Act of the British Parliament, passed in the third and fourth years of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the service of such Slaves:" And whereas by the said Order in Council, it is amongst other things ordered and directed, that for the purposes of the jurisdiction and authorities committed to the justices of the peace, holding special commissions as in the aforesaid Act mentioned, the Colony of St. Lucia shall be divided into not less than two judicial districts, and that the Lieutenant-Governor of this said Island shall by proclamation define, and as occasion may require, shall alter the limits of such judicial districts.

Now, therefore, I, Colonel Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, knight, lieutenant-governor, and commander-in-chief in the Island of St. Lucia and its dependencies, and vice-admiral of the same, in pursuance and in exercise of the powers and authority in me so vested by the said recited Order in Council, do hereby proclaim, order and declare, That this Island of St. Lucia shall for the purposes aforesaid in the said Act mentioned, and in the said Royal Order in Council more fully set forth, be divided into three judicial districts, to be respectively called the First Judicial District, the Second Judicial District, and the Third Judicial District of St. Lucia.

And I do by this my proclamation define, fix and establish the limits of the said three judicial districts of St. Lucia in manner following; viz.

The first judicial district shall comprehend and include the respective quarters of Castries, Gros-Ilet, Dauphin and Anse la Raye; the second judicial district shall comprehend and include the respective quarters of Soufrière, Choiseul and Laborie; and the third judicial district shall comprehend and include the respective quarters of Vieux Fort, Micoud, Praslen and D'Enery.

And I do hereby direct, order and declare, that this my present proclamation shall take effect and be in full force and effect, throughout the said Island of St. Lucia and the dependencies thereof, upon from and after the 1st day of August in the present year 1834.

Given under my hand and the seal of the said Island, this 1st day of August in the 5th year of His Majesty's reign, and in the year of our Lord 1834.

AN ORDINANCE enacted by the Lieutenant-Governor and the Legislative Council of St. Lucia, for fixing and determining the number of Hours per week which shall be allotted to Prædial Apprenticed Labourers for the cultivation of their Provision Grounds, and also for regulating the apportionment of the 45 Hours per week during which Prædial Apprenticed Labourers are required by law to work for the benefit of their Employers. —(Passed 1st August 1834.)

Dudley Hill, Lieutenant-Governor.

Whereas by an Order of The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council passed on the 5th day of June 1834, for carrying into full and complete effect within the Island of St Lucia, an Act of the British Parliament made in the 3d & 4th year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things ordered and directed, that it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor of St. Lucia with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of government thereof, by rules to be framed and published, to determine the number of hours per week, not being fewer than four hours and a half per week, and not being more than seven hours and a half per week, which shall be allotted to every prædial apprenticed labourer for the cultivation of any provision ground which shall have been appropriated and set apart for his support, out of the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourer is by thesaid recited Act required to labour, after the rate of 45 hours per week.

And whereas by the said recited order, it is ordered and directed, that it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the said Legislative Council, to make such regulations as may appear to them best adapted to promote the interests both of the said prædial apprenticed labourers and their employers, as regards the apportionment of the 45 hours per week, during which prædial apprenticed labourers are required by law to work for their employers, and to frame and publish rules and ordinances for that purpose: provided always, that such rules and ordinances shall be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and until disallowed or altered shall remain in full force.

Now, therefore, be it and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by his Excellency Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, knight companion of the most honourable Order of the Bath, &c. &c., lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief of the Island of St. Lucia and its dependencies, and vice-admiral thereof, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of government, in execution of the powers and authority in him and them vested by His Majesty in that behalf;

1. That every prædial apprenticed labourer, for and in respect of whom any ground shall be appropriated and set apart for his support, shall, out of the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourer is by the said recited Act required to labour after the rate of 45 hours per week, be allowed five hours per week for the cultivation of such ground.

2. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for any person being an employer of any able-bodied prædial apprenticed labourer, to require require and exact from such able-bodied prædial apprenticed labourer, and such apprenticed labourer is hereby bound and obliged to work and labour in the name and for the benefit of his employer, any number of hours, not exceeding 12 hours in any one day when employed in manufacturing labour, and any number of hours, not exceeding nine hours in any one day when employed in agricultural labour; and provided also, that no apprenticed labourer who shall be required to work and labour both in agricultural and manufacturing labour in one and the same day, shall be required to work in the whole day more than 10 hours: and provided always, that the whole number of hours to be exacted from any prædial apprenticed labourer for whom ground shall be set apart, shall not exceed 40 hours, and for all others shall not exceed 45 hours per week: and provided nevertheless, that all the rules and regulations provided by the said recited Order of His Majesty in Council of the 5th June 1834, and in the first clause of this Order, be duly complied with; and further that the day for manufacturing labour shall be held to include 24 hours, and the day for agricultural labour to commence at sunrise, and terminate at sunset.

3. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that this ordinance shall take effect and be in force in this Island of St. Lucia and the dependencies thereof, upon, from and after the day of the passing thereof.

Given under my hand and the seal of the said Island, this 1st day of August in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign, and in the year of our Lord 1834.

PROCLAMATION by his Excellency Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, Knight, Lieutenant-Governor, &c. &c.

Dudley Hill, Lieutenant-Governor.

Whereas various false reports respecting the state of the population in distant parts of the Island are prevalent, and amongst other mischievous rumours, there is now current one to the effect that the militia of the quarter of Micoud had been under the necessity of using fire-arms against His Majesty's free subjects, the apprentices of the said quarter; and having every reason to believe the same to be unfounded,—

I have thought fit to issue this my Proclamation for the purpose of reassuring the public mind, and of making generally known, that the recent visits which I have paid to the respective districts of the Colony have fully satisfied me of the loyalty of the labouring population, and have inspired me with the fullest confidence, that their legal services will henceforth continue to be performed with diligence, and the public tranquillity maintained as it hitherto has been, wholly undisturbed. And upon pain of being subjected to the severest penalty the law may award, I do hereby caution all parties against spreading reports, calculated to mislead and disturb the public mind at this critical period.

AN ORDINANCE enacted by the Lieutenant-Governor and Legislative Council of St. Lucia, for providing for the acquiescence of the Minority of the Prædial Apprenticed Labourers in the apportionment of Task-Work; and also providing for the Compensation compellable from Apprenticed Labourers absenting themselves from the service of their Employers.—(Passed 18th August 1834.)

Dudley Hill, Lieutenant-Governor.

Whereas by a certain Act of Parliament passed in the 3d & 4th year of the reign of His most Excellent Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves;" it is amongst other things enacted, that it may be necessary, by regulations in certain cases, to require and provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers, of any task-work which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake.

And it is also by the said recited Act provided, that any Ordinance, to be framed under and by virtue of the said Act, may contain provisions for compelling any apprenticed labourer who shall, during his or her apprenticeship, wilfully absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, either to serve his or her employer after the expiration of his or her apprenticeship, for so long a time as he or she shall have so absented himself or herself from such service, or to make satisfaction to his or her employer for the loss sustained by such absence (except in so far as he or she shall have made satisfaction for such absence, either out of such extra hours as aforesaid, or otherwise), but nevertheless so that such extra service or compensation shall not be compellable after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such apprentice.

And whereas by an Order of His said most Excellent Majesty, in his Privy Council, bearing date the 5th June 1834, certain rules and regulations have been framed and established for carrying into full and complete effect, in this said Island, the above recited Act of Parliament, but no provision has been made for the purpose of securing the acquiescence of the minority of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid: And whereas it is expedient that such provision be made, and that rules and regulations be forthwith framed and established for that purpose.

Now therefore, in pursuance of the said recited Act of Parliament, it is hereby enacted and ordained, by his Excellency Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, &c. &c. lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief of the Island of St. Lucia and the dependencies thereof, vice-admiral of the same, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of Government, in exercise of the powers and authority in him and them vested by His Majesty in that behalf;

1. That in every contract which may be entered into between any employer, and the able-bodied prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate for the performance of any specific work as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, and where in aid of such contract the majority, consisting of not less than two-thirds of the whole number of such apprenticed labourers shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake such specific task-work, it shall and may be lawful for any such employer to distribute and apportion among the whole body of such able-bodied prædial apprenticed labourers attached to such plantation, such specific or task-work, and such contract shall be held as in force and equally binding upon the minority of such able-bodied apprenticed labourers, as if such minority had been parties to and had formerly acquiesced in the said contract, and such minority shall be bound and obliged and compellable, under and by virtue of such contract, to work and labour for the benefit of their employer in such specific or task-work as aforesaid.

Provided always, that for the violation of the terms of such contract for any specific or task-work, all the fines to which any employer shall and may be liable shall be duly enforced against such employer, and that all the same pains and penalties be equally enforced against any such apprenticed labourer to which he or she shall and may be liable for and in respect of the violation by him or her of the duties owing by him or her by law to such employer, and which pains and penalties are by the said recited Royal Order declared to be applicable to any breach of such contract, unless specific penalties be named in the said contract: and provided always, that all the rules and regulations respecting the form, conditions and mode of execution of such contract be duly observed as are in and by the said Royal Order in Council for that purpose made and provided.

2. And be it, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourer who shall during his or her apprenticeship wilfully absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, shall be compelled either to serve his or her employer after the expiration of his or her apprenticeship, for so long a time as he or she may have so absented himself or herself from such service, or to make satisfaction to his or her employer for the loss sustained by such absence (except so far as he or she shall have made satisfaction for such absence, either out of such extra hours, not exceeding fifteen extra hours in the whole in any one week): provided always, that such extra service or compensation shall not be compellable after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such apprentice: provided always, and be it enacted, that all the same pains and penalties to which any such apprenticed labourer shall and may be liable for neglect or violation of duty during the period of his or her apprenticeship are declared to be, and are hereby made applicable to, and shall and may be duly enforced against such apprenticed labourer during the continuance of such additional labour or prolonged apprenticeship: provided always, that the time or times during which such apprenticed labourer shall have so absented himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, shall be established by conviction before any special justice of the peace within the limits of his judicial district, whose conviction of any such apprenticed labourer shall be a sufficient warrant and authority to such employer to compel the performance of such additional labour, or to authorize such prolonged apprenticeship as by the said Act is provided.

3. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that this Ordinance shall take effect and be in force within this Island of St. Lucia, and the dependencies thereof, from and after the day of the date of the promulgation thereof.

Given under my hand and the seal of the said Island, this eighteenth day of August, in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign, and in the year of our Lord 1834.

—No. 61.—

St. Lucia.

AN ORDINANCE enacted by the Lieutenant-Governor and Legislative Council of St. Lucia, for abolishing the office of Commissary-Commandant, and in lieu thereof establishing the office of Justice of the Peace, and defining and regulating the Duties to be performed by the said Officer within the Island of St. Lucia.—(Passed 23d October 1834.)

DUDLEY HILL, Lieutenant-Governor.

WHEREAS, in consequence of the new state and relations of society in this Island, it is expedient to abolish the office of commissary-commandant within this Island, and to establish the office of "justice of the peace" in lieu thereof, and to define and regulate the duties to be performed by justices of the peace: Now therefore be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by his Excellency Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, knight companion of the most honourable Military Order of the Bath, knight of the Portuguese Order of the Tower and Sword, colonel in the British Army and in that of Portugal, lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief in and over the Island of St. Lucia, and the dependencies thereof, and vice-admiral of the same, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of Government, in exercise of the powers and authority in him and them vested by His Majesty in that behalf;

1. That an Ordinance, bearing date the 26th day of July 1825, intituled, "An Ordinance, making more effectual provision for the discharge of the office of Commissary-Commandant;" and that another Ordinance, bearing date the 6th day of March 1832, intituled, "An Ordinance, regulating the Jurisdiction of Commissaries-Commandant or Justices of the Peace in civil and criminal Matters," shall be, and the same are repealed, saving and excepting in so far as the said recited ordinances may have repealed any prior ordinances or regulations.

2. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that upon, from and after the passing of this present ordinance, the office, title and designation of commissary-commandant and lieutenant commissary-commandant, in civil and criminal matters, in the respective quarters of the said Island, shall be and the same are hereby abolished; and it shall and may be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor or officer administering the government of this Island for the time being, by any special commission, or by general commission of the peace, issued under his hand and the public seal of the said Island, to nominate, appoint and assign, or to include in the said general commission of the peace, any good, fit and proper person or persons, constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of this Colony, or for any parish, quarter or other district of the same, to perform all the several duties attached and appertaining to the office of a justice of the peace, in manner hereinafter mentioned: provided always, that no person or persons, so nominated, appointed and assigned as a justice of the peace, shall be entitled to enter upon the duties of his or their said office of justice of the peace, unless he or they shall have first taken the usual oaths appointed to be taken by persons in office: provided always, that no advocate or procureur of the Royal Court, or other legal practitioner in this Island, shall be bound and obliged, whilst so practising, to accept of and serve the said office of a justice of the peace.

3. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons shall refuse or neglect to enter upon, or to take upon himself or themselves, or to perform the duties of the said office of a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of the said Island, or for any parish, quarter or district of the same, such person or persons shall, upon conviction thereof, forfeit and pay the sum of 50*l.* sterling: provided always, that no person shall be compellable to serve the office of a justice of the peace, for a longer period than one year from the date of his nomination, if he shall give to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, three months' written notice of such his intention to decline further service: provided always, that no person shall be compellable to serve again the said office of a justice of the peace within one year after the date of his resignation.

4. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the justices of the peace for the whole of the said Island, or for any parish, quarter or district thereof, shall have, possess and exercise jurisdiction, power and authority in all civil matters not exceeding the amount of 160 livres, and not prohibited by the Royal Order in Council, of 20th June 1831; that all proceedings in civil matters shall be simple and summary, and without appeal: and it shall and may be lawful for any one or more justice or justices of the peace, upon the application of any individual feeling himself aggrieved, to receive the demand, along with the particulars thereof in writing, and to issue, or cause to be issued, a written notice or citation, containing the particulars of the demand, and to direct and authorize any constable, officer of police or other person by him duly authorized to serve the same on the parties, either personally or at their usual or last known place of abode, with a summons to appear before the said justice or justices of the peace, within not less than 24 hours after due notice of the same, upon a certain day to be named in the citation; and every constable, officer of police or other person duly authorized to that effect, serving the notice or citation, shall return the original notice and citation to the justice of the peace issuing the same, and shall make oath of the due service thereof; and all witnesses and others shall be cited, summoned and warned to attend before any justice or justices of the peace, in the same way and manner as that ordered to be practised and observed for the citing and summoning the parties themselves; and any witness refusing, neglecting or omitting to attend, without any lawful and reasonable excuse when duly warned to that effect, on oath also made to that effect, or attending, shall refuse to give his or her evidence, such witness may, for such refusal, be committed to the nearest gaol until he or she shall submit to be sworn or affirm, or to give such his or her evidence: provided always, that if the witness to be cited be an apprenticed labourer, the summons or citation shall be served on the employer of any such apprenticed labourer; and such employer, neglecting or refusing to permit such apprenticed labourer to attend, shall be liable to and incur all the same penalties set forth in this present clause.

5. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that upon the defendant not appearing personally or by some person on his behalf, when duly cited, the justice or justices of the peace may proceed to hear the case ex parte, and to award and pronounce judgment; and in the event of the defendant appearing, the justice of the peace may proceed to hear the parties respectively, and if necessary, to examine the witnesses upon oath, and to pronounce judgment accordingly, and thereafter to issue a warrant under his hand to levy on the goods and chattels of the party condemned, which warrant may be executed throughout the whole extent of the Colony; and any constable, officer of police, or other person duly authorized, may in virtue thereof proceed to levy upon the goods and chattels of the party so condemned, other than the wearing apparel, not exceeding one hundred livres, and implements of trade of the defendant, any law, usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding, sufficient wherewith to pay and satisfy the amount of the judgment, together with the costs; and the said goods and chattels so levied upon may be immediately appraised and valued by any two persons approved of by the justice or justices of the peace; and the goods so levied upon may be given over to the creditor at the appraised value, he, the creditor, paying all fees and expenses, or the said goods and chattels may be sold in the most public street or place, public notice thereof being given forty-eight hours previously, and the proceeds thereof, after paying the fees and expenses, shall be applied in satisfaction of the demand, and the surplus, if any, shall be delivered to the person levied upon: provided always, that if a return be made to the satisfaction of the justice or justices, that no goods and chattels whereon to make sufficient levy can be found, the said justice or justices of the peace may, by warrant under his or their hand and seal, authorize the arrest of the defendant, and direct him to be carried to the nearest gaol, there to be detained at the rate of one entire day's incarceration for every sum of five livres and under, of the amount awarded by the judgment, and no longer: provided always, that such imprisonment shall not be held to extinguish the debt, but the said debt may be recovered at any future period, should any goods or chattels whereon to levy be found: and provided also, that no person shall be liable to be imprisoned a second time for the same debt: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for the keeper of any gaol in the said Island to discharge out of his custody any such defendant if the incarcerating creditor shall not, within six hours after committal, deposit the sum of two livres per diem, in order to meet and to cover the expenses of such maintenance, and to defray all gaol fees.

6. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any justice or justices of the peace in and for the whole of the said Island, or of any parish, quarter or district thereof, shall have, possess and exercise jurisdiction and authority to preserve and to cause to be preserved the King's peace, to suppress all riots and affrays, to disperse all disorderly and tumultuous assemblages, and for that purpose to call in the aid and assistance of all His Majesty's liege subjects present, who, if able, shall be bound to obey all lawful commands, and to appoint special constables, who neglecting or refusing to serve as such, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred livres for each and every offence, to be recovered by distress and levy as is hereinbefore provided; and in case of extreme necessity, it shall and may be lawful for any two or more justices of the peace to require, through the nearest commanding officer of any detachment of militia, the services and assistance of the militia or military force in the Island: provided that one justice of the peace be always present with such force, and issuing any necessary orders, commands and instructions through the commanding officer only.

7. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be the duty of the justices of the peace to do and perform all the duties directed and prescribed heretofore to be performed by commissaries-commandant under and by virtue of any ordinance or ordinances, to take cognizance of all petty misdemeanors, petty assaults and other breaches of the peace which he may in his discretion consider not sufficiently grave to be sent before the judge of police.

8. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in all matters of police it shall and may be lawful for any justice or justices of the peace, either on his or their own view, or on the evidence of one or more credible witnesses, or on the voluntary confession of the party accused, to adjudge such offender to imprisonment in the common gaol of the parish or quarter for a term not exceeding 14 days, with or without hard labour, or a fine not exceeding 160 livres, or whipping not exceeding 25 stripes, or any two or more of such kind of punishment together.

9. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any one or more justices of the peace, within their respective parishes or quarters, shall appropriate and set apart one day at the least in each and every week for the holding of a court in the towns of Castries, Soufrière and Vieux-Fort, for the hearing and trial of such matters and things as may be brought before the said court for judgment and decision.

10. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons shall presume to obstruct, prevent or in any way disturb, molest or ill-treat any justice or justices of the peace, or any person or persons employed by him or them in the execution of their duties pursuant pursuant to this ordinance, the person or persons so offending shall severally forfeit and pay for every such offence, on conviction before any justice of the peace, other than the justice of the peace so molested and ill-treated, a sum not exceeding 160 livres, to be levied in default of payment by warrant of distress under the hand and seal of the justice of the peace convicting, upon the goods and chattels of such offender or offenders, and in default of such satisfaction, such offender or offenders shall and may be imprisoned for any time not exceeding 14 days: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit to gaol any person guilty of an open contempt to such justice in the actual execution of his office, for any time not exceeding 14 days, there to remain, unless such offender shall sooner make his submission to the satisfaction of such justice of the peace.

11. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no suit or action shall be brought against any justice of the peace in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done under and in pursuance of this present ordinance, unless the same shall be commenced within six calendar months after the cause of action occurred; and if any suit or action shall be commenced against any such justice of the peace for any act, matter or thing done by virtue or in pursuance of this ordinance, and such justice of the peace shall at any time before trial tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for any wrong or injury in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court at the time of such suit that such amends have been so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given to the plaintiff for the amount of the sum so tendered, and subject to the deduction therefrom of the costs of the defendant.

12. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all fines recovered under and pursuant to the present ordinance, shall go to and be applied to the uses of this Colony.

13. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no greater fees shall be taken or demanded for any matter or thing to be done under and by virtue of this ordinance, save those mentioned in the Tariff hereunto annexed.

14. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that this present ordinance shall take effect and be in force within the said Island and the dependencies thereof from and after the day of the promulgation hereof.

Given under my hand and the seal of the said Island, this 23d day of October, in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign, and in the year of our Lord 1834.

By His Excellency's Command,

H. E. Fox Young,
Acting Colonial Secretary.

COPY of an ORDINANCE by the Lieutenant-Governor and Legislative Council of St. Lucia, enacting and ordaining certain Rules and Regulations respecting the Rural Police Establishments, and respecting Houses of Correction and Penal Gangs within the Island of St. Lucia.—(Passed 1st December 1834.)

WHEREAS by a certain order of His most Excellent Majesty King William the Fourth, in his Privy Council, bearing date the 5th day of June 1834, for carrying into full effect within this said Island of St. Lucia an Act of the Imperial Parliament, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His said Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," the Lieutenant-Governor of St. Lucia is by the said recited order directed and authorized, by and with the advice of the Legislative Council of the said Island, from time to time to frame and publish all necessary rules for the internal discipline of the police establishment, and of places of safe custody and correction in the said Island; for the clothing, arming, supporting and remunerating the serjeants and privates of the said police; for remunerating constables; for securing the due performance by the said police and constables of their respective duties; for the employment of the penal gangs, and also of the serjeants and privates of the said police when not engaged in police duties; for the support of the prisoners in the said houses of correction and places of safe custody; for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes; for the classification of prisoners; for their religious instruction; for the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety amongst them; and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules.

Now, therefore, in pursuance and in virtue of the said recited Royal Order in Council; Be it, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by his Excellency Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, K. C. B. &c. &c. &c., lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief in and over the Island of St. Lucia and its dependencies, and vice-admiral of the same, &c., by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, in exercise of the powers and authority in him and them vested by His Majesty in that behalf;

Governor authorized to appoint a number of persons to compose a rural police.

1. That the Lieutenant-Governor or officer administering the government of this said Island is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint during pleasure a certain number of persons to compose and act as the rural police of this Island, and during the period of the service and good conduct of such persons as police officers they shall receive the following pay; that is to say, each serjeant in the police shall receive the sum of ten livres, current money of this Island, per day, to be paid to him in equal monthly instalments by the colonial treasurer in this Island, through the stipendiary special justice of the district to which the said police officer is attached; and each private of the police shall receive the sum of five livres like current money per day, to be paid to him in equal monthly instalments in manner aforesaid.

Privates may be promoted for good conduct.

2. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that as vacancies occur among the serjeants at the police establishments it shall and may be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor or officer administering the government to promote privates for good conduct to such vacancies from time to time.

Oath to be administered to each serjeant and private of police.

3. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the serjeants and privates of police so to be appointed under and by virtue of this ordinance, shall each and every of them, previously to his entering upon the execution of the duties of his office, take an oath before the stipendiary special justice of the peace of the district where the police settlement is, of which such serjeant or private shall be a member; which oath any such stipendiary special justice of the peace of such district is hereby authorized to administer; the tenor of which to be as follows:—

"I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely swear, that I will well and truly serve our Sovereign Lord the King as a police officer for the judicial district of this Island, according to the best of my skill, ability and knowledge. So help me GOD."

The privates, on enrolment, to be numbered by the serjeant; each to be provided with a uniform.

4. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the several privates appointed to the respective police establishments shall immediately on their enrolment be respectively numbered by the serjeant of such establishment, and each shall be provided with the following dress or uniform; that is to say, a blue cloth jacket with skirts so made as to button close up to the chin, with a standing collar; on each side of each collar shall be worked in scarlet cloth the letter or number, distinguishing the police settlement or judicial district to which such private belongs; one pair of duck trowers, one black hat and two pairs of strong shoes; that each serjeant shall be provided with a blue cloth jacket with standing collar, on each side of which shall be worked in scarlet cloth the letter or number distinguishing the police settlement or judicial district to which such serjeant belongs, and with three stripes or chevrons in scarlet cloth on the left arm; and that in all other respects the serjeants shall be dressed as the privates are hereby directed to be; which said uniforms are to be worn by the said police officers at all times when on actual duty; and the said uniforms and other articles shall be annually furnished to them at the public expense, under the direction of the Lieutenant-Governor or officer administering the government of this said Island.

Governor authorized to arm and accoutre the police.

5. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the Lieutenant-Governor or officer administering the government is hereby authorized and empowered to arm and accoutre the said police officers in such manner as shall be deemed expedient for the due performance of their duties, which said arms and accoutrements shall be provided at the public expense, and shall be kept and preserved at all times in complete order, and be deposited in some convenient place to be appropriated to that purpose at each police settlement.

The police to carry into prompt execution the orders of the special justices.

6. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be the duty of each and every serjeant and private of each police settlement, to carry into prompt execution all such lawful orders and commands as they shall respectively from time to time receive from any special justice or justices of the district under the Order in Council of 5th June 1834, or from any other magistrate as hereinafter mentioned, for the prevention or repressing of crimes and enforcing obedience to the laws.

The rural police to act as conservators of the peace.

7. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the serjeants and privates of the rural police shall act as conservators of the peace for the respective judicial districts to which they belong; and they shall have, exercise and enjoy within their respective districts, all the powers, authorities and immunities which are incident to the office of a constable or other officer of the general police of this Island, and which are by the general law of the said Island vested in and given to constables or officers of police in general; and all such powers, authorities and immunities are hereby declared to be fully and absolutely vested in and given to such serjeants and privates of the rural police, so long only as such serjeants and privates of the rural police shall remain and be employed in such capacity, and no longer.

Justices of the peace can impose a penalty upon police officers for disobedience, &c.

8. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in all cases in which any officer of police shall be guilty of any disobedience of any lawful commands, or infringement of any bye-laws or regulations for the government of the police establishments, or other impropriety of conduct or breach of duty as such police officer, it shall and may be lawful for any two special justices of the peace of the judicial district to which such police officer belongs, and before whom any such police officer shall be convicted of any such offence, to impose a penalty on him of not more than 14 days' pay and not less than two days' pay; and in case the the said fine shall not be paid immediately or within such time as the special justices shall direct before whom the conviction took place, such special justices of the peace are hereby authorized and directed to deduct the amount of such fine, and detain the same from the pay and salary due and owing to such police officer.

Police to be mustered twice a day; each serjeant to keep an orderly book, in which is to be entered daily a report, &c. &c.

9. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the serjeant at each police settlement shall muster the privates twice a day for morning and evening parade, and each serjeant shall keep an orderly book or books in which he shall faithfully and accurately enter and transcribe a daily written report as to the effective strength, condition and conduct of the privates and of prisoners under his charge and superintendence, specifying the names of all offenders, nature of offence and punishment with the name of the committing special justice; and the orderly book or books shall be open for inspection to any special justice of the peace or other person duly authorized, visiting and inspecting the police settlement.

The serjeant, in case of insubordinate conduct among the privates, can place the offending party under arrest, &c. &c.

10. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in the event of any insubordinate, refractory or mutinous behaviour among the privates at any police settlement, it shall and may be lawful for the serjeant to place the offending party under arrest, and detain the offender until a communication can be made to and an answer received from the nearest special justice of the peace for the district.

In cases of emergency, any special justice of the peace can summon to his assistance any number of police officers from any other police settlement.

11. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in all cases of emergency, it shall and may be lawful for any special justice of the peace to summon or cause to be summoned, either by signal or otherwise, to his assistance, any number of police officers from any other police settlement, and the person having charge of such other police settlement not himself being a special justice, shall furnish the said assistance.

Any police officer, upon reasonable cause being shown, can enter upon any plantation within the district, and search for absentees, &c.

12. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for any police officer in uniform, upon reasonable cause being shown to him to enter upon any plantations and estates within the district, and to search for absentees, and every employer or person having the charge of any apprenticed labourer shall, as soon as possible after he or she shall have obtained the knowledge that any one or more of such apprenticed labourers has or have absented himself, herself or themselves without the permission or sanction of such employer or person having such charge as aforesaid, make such report thereof to any special justice of the peace for the district, who shall thereupon direct and authorize any police officer of his district, in order that measures may be forthwith adopted for the apprehension of such absentee or absentees; it being hereby declared that the fee for the capture of such runaway shall be at the rate of ten livres per head if in the country and five livres per head if in town, and no more, to be paid by the employer of such absentee: provided always, that if any person or persons shall presume to obstruct or in any way molest, disturb or ill-treat any officer of the police or any constable in the execution of their duties pursuant to this ordinance, the person or persons so offending shall severally forfeit and pay for every such offence, on conviction before any special justice of the peace, a sum not exceeding 500 livres, to be levied by warrant of distress under the hand and seal of the special justice of the peace so convicting, upon the goods and chattels of such offender or offenders; and in default of payment or recovery of the fine by distress as aforesaid, such offender or offenders shall and may be imprisoned for any time not exceeding 30 days.

In case of martial law being proclaimed, the police placed under the immediate command of the Governor or other person in military command.

13. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in case of martial law being proclaimed in this said Island, the said police officers, in each judicial district, shall be, and come under the immediate command of the Lieutenant-Governor, or other person in military command for the time being, and they shall be employed in such service as the Lieutenant-Governor, or other person in military command shall direct, in the same way and manner as the militia of the said Island, and be subject to the same rules and regulations, pains and penalties which may be in force at the time in regard to the said militia.

Privates of the police when not on actual duty, to be employed in repairing the buildings, &c.

14. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that when the privates at each police settlement are not engaged in actual duty, it shall and may be lawful to compel each and every private to work and labour, not exceeding six hours per day, Sundays and holidays excepted, in the erecting and repairing the buildings and other places at each settlement, and also to work and labour in cultivating any ground which may have been purchased, appropriated and set apart for the special use of the members of the police settlement as provision grounds.

Apprenticed labourers condemned to imprisonment, may be compelled to work and labour in whitewashing, cleansing the buildings, &c.

15. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all apprenticed labourers who shall have been condemned to imprisonment in any house of correction, with hard labour, in the penal gang at each police settlement, shall be placed under the immediate superintendence of the serjeant of police; and such apprenticed labourers shall and may be compelled to work and labour during a space not exceeding 10 hours in each and every lawful day, in erecting, repairing or in whitewashing every three months, and in cleansing daily, the buildings and houses of correction at each police settlement, or in working upon or repairing the roads and highways, or other public works in the district, or in cultivating any such ground so appropriated and set apart as aforesaid for the use of the police settlement.

Apprenticed labourers, when confined, to be furnished with good wholesome food at the public expense.

16. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that each apprenticed labourer of the age of 10 years and upwards, so confined as aforesaid, shall, during the period of such his or her detention, be furnished, at the public expense, with an allowance of good, wholesome, average, merchantable food, according to the usual gaol allowance: provided always, that that every such apprenticed labourer shall, during his or her detention in such house of correction, and labouring under any acute or dangerous disease, be entitled to such and the same medical attendance, and the use of such medicines or nourishment, as he or she may be entitled to claim from his or her employer, under section 16, c. 4, of the Royal Order in Council of 5th June 1834.

Persons furnishing spirituous liquors to apprenticed labourers under confinement, subject to a fine or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour.

17. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person or persons shall attempt or endeavour to convey, furnish or supply spirituous liquors to any apprenticed labourers so confined and detained, without the express sanction and authority in writing, from any special justice of the peace for the district, to convey, furnish or supply spirituous liquors, such person or persons so offending shall, for every such offence, on conviction before any justice of the peace for the district, forfeit and pay a fine which shall not be less than 10 livres, nor exceed 100 livres current money, to be recovered by warrant of distress, in manner aforesaid, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding eight days.

Male apprenticed labourers to be kept apart from females.

18. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all male apprenticed labourers so condemned and detained as aforesaid, shall be kept separate and apart from all female apprenticed labourers also so condemned and detained, and all communication and intercourse between the sexes shall be rigorously interdicted.

Classification of condemned apprenticed labourers.

19. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that condemned apprenticed labourers shall be classified as follows; that is to say, apprenticed labourers convicted of indolence, carelessness or negligence in performing their work, shall form the first class.

Apprenticed labourers convicted of absence from work, and running away from the service of their employers, shall form the second class.

Apprenticed labourers convicted of drunkenness and disobedience of lawful commands, shall form the third class.

And apprenticed labourers convicted of unlawful combination, or of conspiracy and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, shall form the fourth class.

Punishment of apprenticed labourers for misconduct.

20. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourers, so detained as aforesaid at any house of correction, who shall be convicted of committing any uncleanliness, or behaving in any riotous, insubordinate or disorderly manner, or who shall be found, or proved to have been in a state of intoxication, or who shall wilfully injure or destroy any tools or implements, or any other thing whatsoever, or who shall effect, or attempt to effect his, her or their escape from such houses of correction, shall be liable, on conviction, to suffer such punishment as a special justice of the peace may legally award.

The penal gang to be mustered every evening, and prayers read to them.

21. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be the duty of the serjeant, or other person in charge of each police settlement, to make a muster of the penal gang every evening, and to read or recite, or cause to be read and recited, in an audible voice, in presence of the assembled condemned apprenticed labourers, the usual evening prayers.

Apprenticed labourers condemned to the penal gang, to wear a distinguishing mark or marks.

22. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all apprenticed labourers, so condemned to the penal gang at such houses of correction as aforesaid, shall, whilst so employed in any work, wear such distinguishing mark or marks thereon as the Lieutenant-Governor may be pleased to appoint; and any person harbouring or concealing any prisoner of the penal gang, who may have effected his or her escape therefrom, or taking off or assisting any of the penal gang to take off or to conceal his or her mark, shall, on conviction for every such offence before any special justice, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 40 livres, current money of this said Island, or to suffer imprisonment, with hard labour, at any public gaol of the Island, for a period not exceeding 48 hours.

Apprenticed labourers sworn in as constables, when called upon to assist in the pursuit or apprehension of runaways, to receive a remuneration.

23. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that when any apprenticed labourer, appointed and sworn in as a constable, shall be called upon and required to assist in the pursuit or apprehension of, or shall himself arrest any runaways or other disorderly apprenticed labourers, such constable shall receive the whole, or a proportionate part of the remuneration, at the same rate of capture-money as the police officers themselves would receive for every person so apprehended and committed to safe custody.

Rural Police empowered to arrest persons of suspicious character, or who are vagrants.

24. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be lawful for any police officer to stop and detain any person or persons of a suspicious character or who are vagrants, and without ostensible business in the quarter or district, or without any visible means of subsistence, or refusing to give a good account of himself or herself, or if known to be an idle and disorderly person, and shall convey such person or persons, without any unnecessary delay, before the nearest justice of the peace for the said island, or for any quarter of the same, to be dealt with by him according to law.

No suit or action can be brought against any police officer or constable after the expiration of six months.

25. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no suit or action shall be brought against any police officer or constable in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done and performed in the exercise of his office, under and in pursuance of this present Ordinance, unless the same shall be commenced within six calendar months after the cause of action occurred, and until 14 days' notice thereof in writing shall have during these six months been given to such police officer or constable; and if any such suit or action shall be commenced against any such police officer or constable within the said period of six months, and with the written notice aforesaid, and if such police officer shall at any time before trial tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for any wrong or injury in respect of which the same same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court at the time of such suit or action, that such amends have been so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given to the plaintiff to the amount so tendered, subject however to the deduction therefrom of the costs of the defendant. ST. LUCIA. Appendix (B.)

26. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that all fines recovered under and by virtue of the present Ordinance, shall go and be applied to the public uses of this Colony. Appropriation of fines.

27. And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that this present Ordinance shall take effect and be in force within the said Island of St. Lucia, and the dependencies thereof, from and after the day of the promulgation hereof.

COPY of an ORDINANCE, "For amending and explaining part of the 12th Clause of an Ordinance respecting the Duties of the Rural Police, in apprehending Absentee Apprenticed Labourers, in the Island of St. Lucia."—(Passed 15th June 1835.) No. 63.

WHEREAS by an Ordinance bearing date the 1st day of December 1834, intituled, "An Ordinance, by the Lieutenant-Governor and Legislative Council of St. Lucia, enacting and ordaining certain Rules and Regulations respecting the Rural Police Establishments, and respecting Houses of Correction and Penal Gangs within the Island of St. Lucia," it is by the 12th clause thereof enacted and ordained, that it shall and may be lawful for any police officer in uniform, upon reasonable cause being shown to him, to enter upon any plantations or estates within the district, and to search for absentees; and any employer or person having the charge of any apprenticed labourer shall, as soon as possible after he or she shall have obtained the knowledge that any one or more of such apprenticed labourers has or have absented himself, herself or themselves without the permission or sanction of such employer or person having such charge as aforesaid, make such report thereof to any special justice of the peace for the district, in order that measures may be forthwith adopted for the apprehension of such absentee or absentees: And whereas it is necessary to amend and explain that part of the said twelfth clause of the said recited Ordinance as respects absentees; Now therefore be it, and it is hereby enacted, by his Excellency Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, knight, lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief in and over this said Island of St. Lucia and its dependencies, and vice-admiral thereof, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of Government, in exercise of the powers and authority in him and them vested by His Majesty in that behalf, that no apprenticed labourer shall be deemed and taken to be an absentee in terms of the said recited Ordinance, unless such apprenticed labourer shall be a deserter, or a vagabond, or a runaway, or be found in any place more than five miles distant from his, her or their residence, excepting in his, her or their way to or from some place of public worship, or to or from any public market, and not having with him, her or them a written pass, for that or any other purpose, from his, her or their employer, or from the special justice of the district, in terms of the Royal Order in Council of 5th June 1834.

And be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that this Ordinance shall take effect and be in force within this Island and the dependencies thereof, from and after the day of the promulgation thereof.

COPY of an ORDER in COUNCIL, for establishing a Registry of Slaves in the Settlement of Honduras. No. 64.

At the Court at Brighton, the 24th day of January 1834:

Present, The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by a certain Act of Parliament made and passed in the 3d and 4th year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves;" after reciting, that in the settlements in the occupation of His Majesty and of His Majesty's subjects in Honduras, no law is in force for the registration of slaves; and that doubts might be entertained respecting the authority of His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, to make laws binding on His Majesty's subjects therein, it is declared and enacted, that it is and shall be lawful for His Majesty, by any order or orders to be by him for that purpose made, with the advice of his Privy Council,

HONDURAS.

Order in Council. No. 64.

Council, to establish a registry of slaves for the purposes of this Act, within the said settlement; and that all laws made by His Majesty for the government of his said subjects, shall, for the purposes of the said Act, be as valid and effectual as any laws made by His Majesty in Council for the government of any Colonies subject to the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council are or can be: Now, therefore, in pursuance and exercise of the powers by the said Act in His Majesty vested, or thereby declared to belong to him, and in exercise and in virtue of all other powers vested in His Majesty by His royal prerogative, His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that there shall be established within His Majesty's settlements at Honduras, a public registry for the registration and enrolment of the names and descriptions of all negroes, mulattoes and mustees, who now are held in a state of slavery within the said settlements.

And it is hereby further ordered, that within the term of one month from and after the arrival of this present order at Honduras, and the receipt thereof by the superintendent of His Majesty's subjects there, for the time being, the same shall be publicly notified to the inhabitants of the said settlements, in such manner as to the said superintendent shall seem most fit and effectual; and the said superintendent shall forthwith proceed to appoint some fit and proper person then resident there, to the office of registrar of slaves for the said settlements; which person, before he enters on the execution of his said office, shall take the following oath before the said superintendent:

"I, A. B., do solemnly promise and swear, that I will not willingly or knowingly make, or permit or suffer to be made, any false or fraudulent entry, erasure or obliteration in the registry of slaves to be committed to my charge; but if any such false or fraudulent act shall become known to me, will immediately give notice thereof to the superintendent of His Majesty's subjects at Honduras, for the time being, and will in all respects faithfully and uprightly perform the duties of the office of registrar of slaves for these settlements.

"So help me God."

And the said person so appointed to the said office of registrar of slaves shall also, before he enters on the execution of his said office, become bound by bond or recognizance to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the said superintendent, himself in the penal sum of 1,000 l., and his sureties each in the sum of 200 l. sterling money, with condition for the faithful performance by him the said registrar of all the duties of his said office; and in case of the death, absence or incapacity of the said registrar, or any avoidance of the said office, a new registrar shall be in like manner from time to time appointed by His Majesty, his heirs or successors, or by the superintendent for the time being, (until the royal pleasure, in respect of such appointment shall be signified), who shall take the same oath, and enter into like securities, before he enters on the execution of the said office.

And it is hereby further ordered, that the said superintendent shall also forthwith proceed to provide a proper and convenient office within or near the town of Belize, for the sole purpose of the registry hereby established, wherein the books and papers belonging thereto may be at all times safely kept.

And it is hereby further ordered, that the said registrar shall forthwith provide a large blank paper book, strongly and durably bound, for the purpose of the registry and enrolment hereinafter directed, to be intituled, "Registry of Slaves;" in which said book shall be entered and registered, in manner hereinafter directed, the names and descriptions of all slaves within or belonging to the said settlement.

And it is hereby further ordered, that within one calendar month from and after the public notification of this order in Honduras, as aforesaid, every person who shall be then resident in the said settlements, and who shall then own or be in possession of any slave or slaves whatsoever, within the said settlements, whether as proprietor, mortgagee, trustee or receiver, manager or attorney, or otherwise howsoever, whatever his tenure of or title to the same may be, shall respectively make and deliver, upon oath, to the registrar so to be appointed, such schedules, lists and particulars in writing, subscribed by him, her or them, to be called his or her original Return of Slaves, as are hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, every such person shall so make and return a schedule or list, in writing, containing, in the first place, the name and description of the present owner or owners of such slave or slaves, as well as of the person or persons then in possession of the same and making such return, and the right or character in which he, she or they then hold possession of and claim title to such slave or slaves, namely, whether as proprietor, lessee, mortgagee, sequestrator, guardian, committee, trustee, receiver, executor, administrator, attorney, manager or otherwise; and if such slave or slaves shall have been purchased or acquired within seven years prior to such return, then the name or names of the seller or former owner thereof; and after such descriptions as aforesaid of the owner or owners of such slaves respectively in the said schedule, the parties making the said returns shall proceed to name, describe and enumerate distinctly thereon the several negro, mulatto or other slaves then belonging to the same owner or owners, by distinct lists, in manner following; that is to say, in the first place, such schedule shall contain a list of all slaves who have husbands or wives, either by actual marriage or constant cohabitation, or who have parents or children, brothers or sisters among the slaves of the same owner or owners; which list shall be intituled, "The List of Families and Slaves of C. D. the Owner of Slaves;" in which list shall be inserted the name of the owner; and the said list shall be divided into as many sections as there are different families to be inserted therein; and each section shall be intituled, "The Family of A. B.," inserting the name of the superior relation, or where there are only brothers or other relatives of the same same degree, the name of the elder individual of such relations; and each of the said schedules shall also contain two other lists, in one of which shall be inserted the names of such male slaves, and in the other of such female slaves, as have no wives or husbands, parents or children, brothers or sisters, among the slaves of the same owner or owners; which lists shall be respectively intituled, "General List of Male Slaves," and "General List of Female Slaves," belonging to C. D.

And all the slaves belonging to the same owner or owners shall be named and described in the said schedule respectively, in the particular lists or sections to which they respectively belong, in the manner and form following; that is to say,

The schedule or paper containing each of the said lists shall be divided into five perpendicular columns, of convenient breadths respectively intituled, at the heads thereof, "Names, Surnames, Colours, Employment and Age;" and the more clearly to distinguish the description of each particular slave, as many horizontal lines, with convenient spaces between them, shall be drawn across the said perpendicular lines or columns as are equal in number to the number of slaves to be inserted in each list.

And in the first of the said columns shall be inserted the name of baptism of each slave, if he or she shall have been baptized; and if not, the name by which he or she has been usually called and known. In the second of the said columns shall be inserted the surname or second name of the slave, if he or she has ever been called or known by any surname or second name; and if not, then in cases of family slaves included in the said lists of families, the name of the superior relation or elder individual; and in the cases of slaves who are included in the said general lists of males and females, such name as the owner or party making the return shall think fit to insert therein as the surname by which the slave and his or her lawful issue, or her natural issue, and their descendants respectively shall thereafter always be called. In the third of the said columns shall be inserted "Negro," "Mulatto" or "Mustee," as the case may be, of such designation of intermediate shades of colour within the limited degrees of slavery, if any, as are in use within the said settlements. In the fourth of the said columns shall be inserted the particular trade, occupation or ordinary employment of the slave, specifying in the cases of mechanics, artizans or handicrafts-men, the particular art or business in which he or she is usually employed; in the cases of family slaves, the particular domestic service or department in which he or she is usually employed. And in the fifth of the said columns shall be inserted the age of the slave, according to the best of the knowledge and belief of the owner or other party making the return.

And for the better ascertaining of the proper form of such returns of slaves as are hereby required to be made, so that no person may pretend ignorance thereof, such superintendent is hereby authorized and required to prepare, in such manner as to him shall seem most fit and effectual, a form or example of the returns hereby required to be made; and a printed copy thereof, with blanks to be filled up, according to the rules aforesaid, shall accordingly be provided by the registrar, to be appointed as aforesaid, and delivered by him to all persons applying for the same, at a price not exceeding three-pence for each printed copy.

And it is further hereby ordered, that every person making and subscribing any and every such schedule or return, shall personally deliver the same, either to the said registrar or to some other person that shall be by him appointed and deputed to receive such returns or schedules in the proper district of the said settlements in which the party making the same shall reside; and such party shall at the same time take the following oath, which the said registrar, and every person to be by him appointed and deputed as aforesaid, is hereby empowered and required to administer; that is to say,

"I, A. B. [name the deponent], do solemnly swear, that the schedule or return now by me delivered to be registered, contains, as I verily believe, a just, true and full return, account and description of all slaves now belonging to the owner or owners therein named, and being within these settlements, and that the said return is made by me according to the best of my knowledge and belief, truly and without fraud, deceit or evasion.

"So help me God."

And it is further hereby ordered, that within one calendar month, to be computed from the time hereinbefore appointed for the making and delivery of the said returns or schedules, every return or schedule that shall have been duly made and delivered to the said registrar, or any of his said deputies, shall by him, his clerks or assistants be entered and copied in a fair, distinct and legible manner, in the book to be by the said registrar appointed for the registry and enrolment of slaves, as aforesaid, under the name or names of the owners mentioned in the returns, which name or names shall be written in a large hand, at the top of every double page or folio containing such return: that every double page or folio of the said book, that is to say, the whole breadth of the book when open, from the left to the right-hand, shall be divided by perpendicular lines into five different columns of such breadth, and by horizontal lines into spaces of such dimensions as will most conveniently contain the various particulars hereinbefore directed to be returned in the said schedules or lists of slaves, leaving at the top of each folio a space for the name of the particular owner whose slaves are registered therein, which name shall be always therein written in large and distinct letters; and at the top of the first of the said five columns shall be written, "Names;" of the second, "Surnames;" of the third, "Colour;" of the fourth, "Employment;" and of the fifth, "Age:" and under each of the said titles in the said five columns shall be entered, according to the different schedules or lists returned, the particulars respectively contained in the same; and at the end of the registry of each original return shall be summed up and written in words at length, the whole number of slaves returned and registered as belonging to the owner or owners mentioned in such returns; that the pages of the said book shall be distinctly numbered at the top of each double page or folio, from the beginning to the end of each book respectively, before any entry shall be made therein; and at the bottom of each page containing any registry of slaves, as well as at the end of the registry of each original return, the registrar shall subscribe his name at length, in testimony of the fidelity and accuracies of the entries therein contained.

And it is hereby further ordered, that no erasure shall on any pretence, or for any cause whatever, be at any time permitted to be made in the said books of registry; but if any clerical error shall occur in the insertion of any name or other particular in any schedule or return contained, or otherwise in the making up and keeping the said books of registry, a line of red ink shall be drawn through the word or words improperly inserted, so as to leave the original word or words legible; and the correction thereof, or any word or words which may have been erroneously omitted, shall either be interlined or written in the margin of such list or entry, and always, when practicable, by the same hand as the rest of the same list or entry; and the registrar shall, either under such word or words written in the margin, or under a mark of reference there made to any such interlineations, subscribe his name at length; but after the registry of original returns of slaves shall have been completed and certified upon oath as hereinafter directed, no interlineation, insertion or other correction of the registry of any such original returns, shall on any account be made or permitted, except as is hereinafter expressly provided.

And it is hereby further ordered, that an office copy, certified as such by the said registrar, of the registry of slaves belonging to any particular owner or owners, shall, at the request and charge of the owner or owners, or party or parties who made the return, be made and delivered to him, her or them by the said registrar, and for which there shall be charged no more than at the rate of 1 d. sterling for every slave therein named; and all persons shall have free liberty at all seasonable hours to inspect the said register books in the presence of the registrar or his assistants, for the purpose of ascertaining that the returns and lists by them, or on their behalf delivered, have been actually registered in manner aforesaid.

And it is hereby further ordered, that when and so soon as all the original returns or schedules, which shall have been delivered to the said registrar pursuant to this order, shall have been fairly entered and registered as aforesaid, which shall be done and completed within the term of two calendar months from and after the first public notification of this order in Honduras as aforesaid, the registrar shall give notice thereof forthwith to the superintendent for the time being, and such superintendent shall thereupon publicly notify to the inhabitants of Honduras, in such manner as he shall deem most fit and effectual, that the registry of slaves is ready to be verified before him, and is and will continue open at the proper office for the inspection of all persons who have made returns of slaves for insertion therein, for the term of one calendar month from the date of such notification, to the intent that they may be satisfied of the accuracy of the said registry; and that if any owners or possessors of slaves within or belonging to the said settlements have, from any accident or unavoidable impediment, hitherto omitted to return proper schedules or lists of their slaves into the said registry, as by this order required, they must immediately apply to the said superintendent, who, upon satisfactory proof that such omission has not been wilful, has power to make an order for the admission and registration of their returns or schedules by the registrar; but that if this remedy is not taken, so as to obtain such registration within the said term of one month, the omission cannot afterwards be supplied.

And it is hereby further ordered, that if, during the said last-mentioned term of one month, any owner or possessor, owners or possessors of a slave or slaves, shall apply to the said superintendent, and make it appear to his satisfaction that the non-delivery of his, her or their return or returns of slaves to the said registrar within the term formerly prescribed, has arisen from accident or some unavoidable impediment, and not from wilful neglect or delay, and shall then produce such his, her or their return or returns, and make oath before the said superintendent that no slave therein named has been imported or brought into the said settlements within six calendar months preceding, it shall and may be lawful for the said superintendent, if he shall think fit, to make an order in writing, by him subscribed, and addressed to the said registrar, commanding him to receive and register any such return or returns, as if the same had been delivered in due time; which order the registrar is hereby required to obey, so as any such new or further return may be registered in the said books in manner aforesaid, before the end of the said term of one calendar month last before mentioned.

And it is further ordered, that, at the end of the said last-mentioned term of one month, the said registrar shall proceed finally to close and authenticate the said registration of all the slaves in the said settlement, in manner following; (to wit) in the said book the said registrar shall write with his own hand, in large legible characters, immediately after the last entry of the said returns or lists of slaves, either on the same folio or double page, or on the back of the last leaf containing the same, "Here ends the original registry of the slaves of Honduras;" and the said registrar shall thereto subscribe his name, and below the said signature shall be written, in like characters, by the said registrar, the following affidavit:

"Before A. B. [inserting the name and title of the superintendent for the time being] personally appears C. D. [naming himself], the registrar of slaves in Honduras, who being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists, makes oath and says, that he the said C. D. has twice carefully examined and compared all the preceding entries in this book with all the different returns of slaves delivered to him, or, to his knowledge or belief, to any deputy, clerk or assistant by him appointed; first, by examining the said entries, while his clerk or assistant read the original returns respectively entered therein; and afterwards by examining the said returns, returns, while his clerk or assistant read the said entries in this book respectively made therefrom; and that he is enabled thereby to depose, and does depose, that the preceding registry of the slaves of Honduras is in all other respects correctly and faithfully made."

Which affidavit, being subscribed by the said registrar, shall be sworn before the said superintendent, who shall subjoin thereto the following certificate, under his hand and the great seal of the said Island:

"I, A. B. [inserting his name and title of office], do hereby certify, that the above affidavit was duly sworn before me this day of one thousand eight hundred and

And it is hereby further ordered, that as soon as may be after the said original registry shall be closed and authenticated as aforesaid, the said registrar shall prepare accurate and perfect duplicates of both the said books of original registry, by causing the same respectively to be carefully transcribed into other books, of like sizes and forms, to be provided for that purpose, and shall authenticate and certify each of the said duplicates in the same manner and form in all respects as is hereinbefore directed in regard to the said originals respectively, except that in the affidavits and certificates to be thereunto annexed, the same shall be described as duplicates of the original registries; and the said duplicate books, when so authenticated and certified, shall be delivered by the said registrar to the superintendent for the time being, who shall by the first safe conveyance transmit the same under his official seal to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department in England.

And it is hereby further ordered, that if the said registrar shall, in the exercise of any of the duties hereby imposed upon him, or any of the functions of his said office or otherwise, wilfully make, or knowingly permit or suffer to be made, any false or fraudulent entry in the said books of registry, or either of them, or in the said accounts or abstracts, or shall fraudulently erase, obliterate or alter, or knowingly permit or suffer to be fraudulently erased, obliterated or altered, any entry which shall have been duly made in the said books of registry, or either of them, the said registrar shall, upon conviction of any such offence, not only be liable to all such pains and penalties as ought, by the laws in force within the said settlements at the time of such offence, to be inflicted upon persons convicted of forging or fraudulently altering public judicial records, but shall for ever forfeit his said office, and shall be incapable of ever after holding the same or any other public office within the said settlements, and shall moreover be liable to the civil suits or actions of all and every person or persons who shall sustain any damage or injury by any such offence, who, besides full reparation for such damage or injury, shall recover against such registrar double costs of suit; and if any deputy, assistant or clerk of the said registrar shall commit, or knowingly permit or suffer to be committed any such offence as aforesaid, he shall, upon conviction thereof, not only in like manner be liable to all such pains and penalties as ought by the said laws to be inflicted upon persons convicted of forging or fraudulently altering public judicial records, but shall forfeit such his office or employment, and be incapable of ever after holding the same or any other public office within the said settlements; and if any other person or persons shall wilfully make, or cause or procure to be made, any false or fraudulent entry in the said books of registry or either of them, or in the said accounts or abstracts, or shall fraudulently erase, obliterate or alter, or cause or procure to be erased, obliterated or altered, any entry which shall have been made in the said books of registry, accounts or abstracts, or either of them, every such person or persons so offending shall upon conviction not only be liable to all such pains and penalties aforesaid, but shall forfeit to His Majesty, His heirs or successors, all his and their estate, right, title, property and interest of, in and to any such slave or slaves that shall be the subject or subjects of any such false or fraudulent entry, erasure, obliteration or alteration.

And it is hereby further ordered, that if any person or persons making any such return of slaves as aforesaid, shall falsely and wilfully insert therein any name or names, description or descriptions of any slave or slaves, or pretended slave or slaves, belonging to any owner or owners, knowing that such slave or slaves, or pretended slave or slaves, as shall be so named or described, doth not or do not in fact belong, at the time of making such return to such owner or owners, any person or persons so offending shall forfeit for every slave or pretended slave so falsely returned, the sum of 100*l.* sterling money, to be recovered in such manner as any other penalty or forfeiture may be recovered in the said settlements by any law thereof, or any statute of this kingdom then in force therein, the one moiety thereof to the use of the superintendent for the time being, and the other moiety thereof to the use of such person as shall inform, sue and prosecute for the same: provided always, that no person shall be liable to any such penalty or forfeiture as last aforesaid, in respect of any slave or slaves which he shall prove to have been at the time of the return actually employed in the service of the asserted owner or owners to which the same were represented by such return to belong, although he shall not be able to prove that the property in such slave or slaves was such as was stated in the return, except when the prosecutor shall give evidence beyond the falsification of the return in the point of property, to show that the same was fraudulent or wilfully false.

And it is hereby further ordered, that from and after the said final closing and authentication of the said original registry of slaves in the said settlements, every slave within the said settlements not so registered as a slave, shall be deemed and taken to be the property of His Majesty.

And it is hereby further ordered, that the certificate of the said registrar, by him subscribed, certifying any extracts from the books in his office, shall be received in all courts and by all judges and others, as sufficient evidence of the authenticity of such extract, saving nevertheless to the party or parties against whom such evidence is adduced, the right of contradicting, impeaching or correcting the same by an inspection of and a comparison with the original book or books of registry in the said Island, or the duplicate thereof, to be transmitted to the said Secretary of State as aforesaid.

And it is hereby further ordered, that the said registrar shall be entitled to have and receive for every certificate by him given of any extract from or entry in the said registry, the sum of 10*s.* sterling, and for every 100 words therein contained beyond the first 100 words, the sum of 2*s.* like money, and no more, from the party requiring and obtaining the same; and for every search in the said registry, the sum of 5*s.* like money, and no more; which fees, and all other fees hereby appointed in sterling money, shall be calculated at the rate of exchange prevalent in the said settlements at the time of the service performed.

And the Right honourable Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

Copy of an ORDER in COUNCIL, dated 5th June 1834, for giving effect in the Island of Honduras, to the Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 73, for the Abolition of Slavery.

At the Court at St. James's, the 5th of June 1834:

Present, The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Whereas by an Act passed in the 3d & 4th year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," after reciting, amongst other things, "that in the settlements in the occupation of His Majesty and of His Majesty's subjects in Honduras, no law is in force for the registration of slaves, and doubts might be entertained respecting the authority of His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, to make laws binding on His Majesty's subjects therein," it is declared and enacted, "that it is and shall be lawful for His Majesty by any order or orders to be by him for that purpose made, with the advice of his Privy Council, to establish a registry of slaves for the purposes of this Act within the said settlement; and all laws made by His Majesty for the government of his said subjects shall, for the purposes of this Act, be as valid and effectual as any laws made by His Majesty in Council for the government of any Colonies subject to the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council are or can be:" And whereas in pursuance of the said Act His Majesty hath this day, by the advice of his Privy Council, made a certain Order in Council for carrying the said Act into effect within the Island of Trinidad, of which order a copy is hereunto subjoined: And whereas it is expedient that the regulations for the government of apprenticed labourers should throughout His Majesty's possessions to which the said Act applies, as nearly as may be, and having regard to the variety of local circumstances in such several possessions, be of one uniform tenor: And whereas the state and circumstances of society in the said settlement of Honduras are in many respects peculiar, and differ essentially from the state and circumstances of society as existing in the said Island of Trinidad, and other His Majesty's Colonies in the West Indies: And whereas by reason of the variety and minuteness of such distinctions, it is necessary that provision should be made for the adaptation of the said Order in Council to the case of Honduras by some local authority: Now, therefore, in pursuance of the said recited Act of Parliament, and for carrying the same into effect within the said settlements of Honduras, it is hereby ordered by His Majesty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, that the said Order in Council for the said Island of Trinidad shall, save as hereinafter mentioned, extend to and be in force within His Majesty's said settlements at Honduras, upon, from and after the 1st day of August in this present year 1834: Provided nevertheless, and it is further ordered, that it shall be lawful for the superintendent for the time being of the said settlements, by any proclamation or proclamations to be by him from time to time for that purpose issued, to suspend any part or parts of the said Order which he shall consider inapplicable to the state and circumstances of society in the said settlements, and by any such proclamation or proclamations to adapt the said Order in Council, or any part or parts thereof, to the state and circumstances of society in the said settlements: provided always, that no such proclamation shall in any respect be repugnant to or inconsistent with any thing in the said Act of Parliament contained: And it is further ordered, that the said superintendent shall transmit to His Majesty or to one of his Principal Secretaries of State, copies of any such proclamations for His Majesty's approbation or disallowance: provided also, that no such proclamation shall by the terms thereof be made to operate and take effect, or to be binding upon His Majesty's subjects within the said settlements, until the same shall first have been approved by His Majesty, save only in cases in which it shall appear to the said superintendent for the time being that the delay incident to obtaining His Majesty's approbation of any such proclamation would subject His Majesty's subjects in the said settlement to serious inconvenience, in which cases any such proclamation may by the terms thereof be made to operate and take effect, and to be binding upon Trinidad, Order in Council, 5 June 1834.

His

His Majesty's subjects aforesaid, either from the day of the date thereof, or from any such other time as shall be therein for that purpose appointed, until His Majesty's pleasure shall be known.

And the Right honourable Thomas Spring Rice, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

HONDURAS ORDER.

At the Court at St. James's, the 12th day of August 1835:

Present, The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by a certain Act of Parliament, passed in the 3d and 4th year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves;" it is amongst other things recited, that it is necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for ascertaining with reference to each apprenticed labourer within the said Colonies respectively, whether he or she belongs to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and for determining the manner and form in which, and the solemnities with which the voluntary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such his or her apprenticeship may be effected, and for prescribing the form and manner in which, and the solemnities with which the purchase by any such apprenticed labourer of his or her discharge from such apprenticeship, without, or in opposition, if necessary, to the consent of the person or persons entitled to his or her services shall be effected; and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services shall be made; and how and to whom the amount of such appraisement shall in each case be paid and applied; and in what manner and form, and by whom, the discharge from any such apprenticeship shall thereupon be given, executed, and recorded: And that it is also necessary, for the preservation of peace throughout the said Colonies, that proper regulations should be framed and established for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers; and for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers; and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer; and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter, for any hired service during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer; and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination, on the part of any such apprenticed labourer towards their employers; and for the prevention or punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring, or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer; and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance to the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourers; and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourers, during their term of apprenticeship, from the Colonies to which they may respectively belong: And that it will also be necessary, for the protection of such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, that that various regulations should be framed and established in the said respective Colonies, for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as they are, by the said Act, declared entitled to receive; and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles in cases where the laws at present existing in any such Colony may not, in the case of slaves, have made any regulation, or any adequate regulation for that purpose: And that it is also necessary that proper rules should be established for the prevention and punishment of any frauds which might be practised, or of any omissions or neglects which might occur, respecting the quantity or the quality of the supplies so to be furnished, or respecting the periods for the delivery of the same; and that it is necessary, in those cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid may, either wholly or in part, be raised by themselves, by the cultivation of ground to be set apart and allotted for that purpose, that proper regulations should be made and established as to the extent of such grounds, and as to the distance at which such grounds may be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourers, and respecting the deductions to be made for the cultivation of such grounds from the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereinbefore declared liable to labour: And that it may also be necessary, by such regulations as aforesaid, to secure to the said prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment, for their own benefit, of that portion of their time during which they are not hereby required to labour in the service of their respective employers, and for securing exactness in the computation of the time, during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereby required to labour in the service of such their respective employers: And that it is also necessary that provision should be made for preventing the imposition of task-work on any such apprenticed labourer, without his or her free consent to undertake the same; but that it may be necessary, by such regulations in certain cases, to require and provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate, in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work, which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake; and that it is also necessary that regulations should be made respecting any voluntary contracts into which any apprenticed labourers may enter with their respective employers, or with any other person, for hired service for any future period, and for limiting the greatest period of time to which such voluntary contract may extend, and for enforcing the punctual and effectual performance of such voluntary contracts on the part both of such apprenticed labourers, and of the person or persons engaging for their employment and hire: And that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for the prevention or punishment of any cruelty, injustice, or other wrong or injury which may be done to or inflicted upon any such apprenticed labourers, by the persons entitled to their services; and that it is also necessary that proper regulations should be made respecting the manner and form in which such indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid, shall be made on behalf of such children as aforesaid, and respecting the registering and preservation of all such indentures: And that it is also necessary that provision should be made for ensuring promptitude and despatch, and for preventing all unnecessary expense in the discharge by the justices of the peace, holding such special commissions as in the said Act mentioned of the jurisdiction and authorities thereby committed to them, and for enabling such justices to decide in a summary way such questions as may be brought before them in that capacity, and for the division of the said respective Colonies in districts, for the purposes of such jurisdiction, and for the frequent and punctual visitation by such justices of the peace of the apprenticed labourers within such their respective districts; and that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for indemnifying and protecting such justices of the peace in the upright execution and discharge of their duties; and that such regulations as aforesaid could not, without great inconvenience, be made, except by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or other local legislatures of the said respective Colonies, or by His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, in reference to those Colonies to which the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council extends:

It is therefore enacted and declared, in and by the said Act, that nothing therein contained extends or shall be construed to extend to prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or by such other local legislatures as aforesaid, or by His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, of any such Acts of General Assembly or Ordinances, or Orders in Council, as may be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same, or any of them, into full and complete effect: Provided, nevertheless, and it is thereby enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any such Governor, Council and Assembly, or for any such local legislature, or for His Majesty in Council, by any such Acts of Assembly, Ordinance or Orders in Council as aforesaid, to make or establish any enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order, which shall be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to the said recited Act, or any part thereof; but that every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order shall be, and is thereby declared to be, absolutely null and void and of no effect:

And whereas it is by the said Act further enacted, that all laws made by His Majesty for the government of His Majesty's subjects in Honduras shall, for the purposes of the said Act, be as valid and effectual as any laws made by His Majesty in Council for the government of any Colonies subject to the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council are or can be: And whereas, in pursuance of the said Act, His Majesty did, on the 5th day of June 1834, by the advice of his Privy Council, make a certain Order in Council for carrying the said Act into effect within the island of Trinidad: And whereas, by a certain other Order of

Order in Council. No. 67.

His Majesty in Council, also dated on the 5th day of June 1834, after reciting that it was expedient that the regulations for the government of apprenticed labourers should, throughout His Majesty's possessions, to which the said Act applies, as nearly as might be, and having regard to the variety of local circumstances in such several possessions, be of one uniform tenor; and that the state and circumstances of society in the said settlement of Honduras were, in many respects peculiar, and differed essentially from the state and circumstances of society as existing in the said Island of Trinidad, and other His Majesty's Colonies in the West Indies; and that, by reason of the variety and minuteness of such distinctions, it was necessary that provision should be made for the adaptation of the said Order in Council to the case of Honduras by some local authority; It was, in pursuance of the said recited Act of Parliament, and for carrying the same into effect within the said settlements of Honduras, ordered by His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, that the said Order in Council for the said Island of Trinidad should, save as thereinafter mentioned, extend to and be in force within His Majesty's said settlement at Honduras, upon, from and after the 1st day of August 1834: Provided, nevertheless, and it was further ordered, that it should be lawful for the superintendent for the time being of the said settlements, by any proclamation or proclamations to be by him from time to time for that purpose issued, to suspend any part or parts of the said order which he should consider inapplicable to the state and circumstances of society in the said settlements, and by any such proclamation or proclamations, to adopt the said Order in Council, or any part or parts thereof, to the state and circumstances of society in the said settlements: And it was thereby provided, that no such proclamation should in any respect be repugnant to or inconsistent with any thing in the said Act of Parliament contained: And it was further ordered, that the said superintendent should transmit to His Majesty or to one of his Principal Secretaries of State, copies of any such proclamations for His Majesty's approbation or disallowance; and it was thereby also provided, that no such proclamation should, by the terms thereof, be made to operate and take effect, or to be binding upon His Majesty's subjects within the said settlements, until the same should first have been approved by His Majesty, save only in cases in which it should appear to the said superintendent for the time being, that the delay incident to obtaining His Majesty's approbation of any such proclamation, would subject His Majesty's subjects in the said settlements to serious inconvenience, in which cases any such proclamation might, by the terms thereof, be made to operate and take effect, and to be binding upon His Majesty's subjects aforesaid, either from the day of the date thereof, or from any such other time as should be therein for the purpose appointed, until His Majesty's pleasure should be known:

And whereas the said superintendent of the British settlements at Honduras, in pursuance of the powers in him in that behalf vested by the last recited Order in Council, hath made and established certain regulations for adapting to the state and circumstances of those settlements, the provisions of the Order made by His Majesty in Council for giving effect to the said Act for the Abolition of Slavery within the Colony of Trinidad:

And whereas His Majesty, having this day taken into consideration the regulations so made as aforesaid by the said superintendent, hath been pleased to approve thereof: Now it is hereby ordered by His Majesty, that the said regulations shall be, and the same are hereby confirmed and allowed:

And whereas it is, by the said Act of Parliament, amongst other things enacted, that no part of the sum of twenty millions sterling shall be applied, or be applicable to the purposes in the said Act mentioned, for the benefit of any person then entitled to the services of any slave in any of the Colonies in the said Act mentioned, unless an order shall have been first made by His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, declaring that adequate and satisfactory provision hath been made by law in such Colony, for giving effect to the said Act, by such further and supplementary enactments as aforesaid; nor unless a copy of such Order in Council, duly certified by one of the clerks in ordinary of His Majesty's Privy Council, shall, by the Lord President of the Council, have been transmitted to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, or to the Lord High Treasurer for the time being: Now, therefore, in further pursuance and exercise of the powers in His Majesty in Council, by the said recited Act in that behalf vested, His Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, doth declare, and it is hereby declared, that adequate and satisfactory provision hath been made by law in the said settlements at Honduras, for giving effect to the said recited Act of Parliament, by such further and supplementary enactments as therein are mentioned:

And the Lord President of the Council, and the Right honourable the Lord Glenelg, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

Bahama Islands.

AN ACT auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves."—(Passed February 15, 1834.)

Whereas in and by an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, of the third and fourth years of Your Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it is among other things enacted, that all persons who, on the first day of August in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, shall have been registered as slaves in the Colony, and shall appear by such registration, to be on that day of the full age of six years and upwards, shall, on the said first day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, by force and virtue of the said Act, become apprenticed labourers to their last owners for two certain terms of years; that is to say, all prædial apprentices until the first day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty; and non-prædial apprentices until the first day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight; and that, subject only to such apprenticeship as aforesaid, all persons who on the said first day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, shall have been lawfully registered as slaves as aforesaid, shall, on that day and thenceforth be, to all intents and purposes free and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and absolutely and for ever manumitted: And whereas in and by the said Act of Parliament it is declared necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established, for ascertaining, with reference to each appointed labourer as aforesaid, whether he or she is to belong to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and for other purposes, in the said above-recited Act more particularly and at large set forth, to carry into more complete effect the intentions of the Imperial Legislature in this behalf, which rules and regulations could not without great inconvenience be made, except by the local Legislature of the Colony; and therefore it is, in and by the said Act of Parliament, further enacted and declared, that nothing in that Act contained should extend or be construed to extend to prevent the enactment by the Governor, Council and Assembly of any such Acts of the General Assembly as may be requisite for making and establishing of such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into complete effect; May it please Your Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted, by his Excellency Blayney Townley Balfour, esquire, lieutenant-governor in and over the Bahama Islands, the Council and Assembly, and it is hereby enacted and declared by the authority of the same, That all colonial laws, usages, acts of Assembly, ordinances and rules, of whatsoever nature and however established, so far as the same in any manner establish, recognize, confirm, countenance or favour slavery, or are or were intended for the regulation of the same, or for the government, protection or punishment of slaves, as distinguished from the other inhabitants of these Islands, shall on the said first day of August in the said present year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, be and the same shall remain altogether repealed, and for ever after cease to be of any authority, force or effect whatsoever in this Colony: Provided however, that so far as any person or persons, by reason of having manumitted any slave or slaves, when incapable of labour by reason of old age, sickness or infirmity of body or mind, now is or are or at any time before the said first day of August in this said year as aforesaid, shall become liable for the maintenance of such manumitted slave or slaves, all such Acts of Assembly, or such parts of the same as provide for such maintenance and enforce the same, shall be and remain in full force for and during the natural life or lives of the person or persons manumitted or to be manumitted under such circumstances as aforesaid, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided also, that all persons having heretofore incurred or who shall hereafter, and before the said first day of August in this present year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, incur any pains, penalties, forfeitures or other liabilities under or in virtue of an Act of the General Assembly passed in the tenth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, "An Act to amend, consolidate and bring into one Act the several Laws relating to Slaves, and for giving them further protection and security, and for suspending several Acts and Clauses of Acts therein mentioned, and for other pur oses;" or by reason of any neglect or contravention of the provisions, ordinances or regulations therein contained, relative to the food, clothing or other allowances or treatment of slaves, may and shall be prosecuted for the same, as well at any time after as before the said first day of August in the same year aforesaid, in the same manner and form and to the same effect as if this Act had not been passed, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided no such prosecution shall be commenced after the expiration of six months from and after the said first day of August next.

Preamble.

All Colonial Slave Laws, &c. repealed after 1st August 1834.

except as regards liabilities to support the aged and infirm.

Penalties incurred under Slave Laws, must be sued for within six months from 1st August 1834.

2. And be it further enacted, that all persons who on the said first day of August in the same year aforesaid shall become apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, and who on that day shall be and have been employed on lands belonging to the person or persons entitled to the services

Who shall be prædials attached to the soil.

vices of the said apprentices respectively, in agriculture or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise; that is to say, in or about the cultivation of the soil, or other labour necessary to the production of sugar, silk, cotton, salt, corn or other grain, grass, ground provisions, fruits or esculent vegetables, or in the felling of timber or other trees or brush-wood, or in blasting or in breaking up of rocks or otherwise clearing of land for the purpose of cultivation or otherwise, or in the tending and raising for sale or otherwise, of horses, mules, asses, black cattle, sheep, hogs, or the like stock, or in the carrying or otherwise conveying such produce, manufactures or stock as aforesaid by land carriage to market, whether as actual labourers, cattle-drivers, or in the capacity of overseers, drivers, managers or the like, shall be and be held and considered as prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, within the meaning of this Act, and of the statute of the Imperial Parliament to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid; and all plantations and other lands in which the person or persons entitled to the services of any such apprenticed labourer or labourers as aforesaid, shall for the time have an estate of inheritance, or which shall be by him, her or them held as tenants by courtesy or lease for one or more life or lives, or any certain term of years, and all salt ponds and pans for the raking or manufacturing of salt, in the occupation of him, her or them, entitled to the services of any such apprentice or apprentices as aforesaid, and all lots and parcels of land by him, her or them occupied, in virtue of any permission or other authority to that effect, directly or indirectly from the Crown, in the vicinage of such salt ponds or elsewhere, shall be held and considered as lands the property of all such occupants, within the meaning of this Act, and of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid.

Who prædials unattached

3. And be it further enacted, that all persons who on the said first day of August in this same year aforesaid, shall become apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, and who shall on that day be, and shall have been employed on lands not belonging to the person or persons entitled to the services of the said apprentices respectively, in agriculture or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise; that is to say, in such work, labour or other employment as in the next preceding section of this Act is more particularly set forth and described, shall be held and considered as prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil within the meaning of this Act, and of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid.

Persons described in the two preceding sections to be prædial attached or unattached to the soil, as the case may be.

4. And be it further enacted, that when any apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, whose ordinary, usual or habitual employment while slaves as aforesaid, within the time limited as aforesaid, may be and shall have been as in the two immediately preceding sections of this Act is set forth, all such apprenticed labourers shall be and be held and considered as prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid (attached or not attached to the soil, as the case may be) within the meaning of this Act, and of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid, notwithstanding that during certain intervals of time in which labourers, from the general or particular nature of the season, or weather, or other sufficient cause, are not usually so engaged, the said apprentices, while slaves as aforesaid, shall have been employed within the time aforesaid in hunting wild cattle, fishing or killing, or taking wild fowl or other game, or the like, for their own use or that of the plantations, settlements or establishments to which they may have belonged or been attached, or in wood-cutting, building of cabins, huts or sheds, setting up stone or wooden fences, cutting of drains, or the breaking up of hulks or other like work, shall be and be held and considered as prædial apprenticed labourers (attached or not attached to the soil, as the case may be), within the meaning of this Act, and of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, that when any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall be of the full age of twelve years or upwards on the said first day of August in this present year aforesaid, such apprentice shall not then be or afterwards become prædial, either attached or unattached to the soil, unless he or she shall then be and have habitually been employed as aforesaid in the cultivation of the soil or otherwise as aforesaid, from the twenty-eighth day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, to the said first day of August in this present year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, but shall then be and thence remain non-prædial; any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Proviso.

Persons of the age of 12 years and upwards on 1st August 1834, shall be considered non-prædials, unless they have been habitually employed in agriculture, &c. &c. from 28th August 1832, to 1st August 1834.

Who are to be non-prædials.

5. And be it further enacted, that all apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, whose ordinary usual or habitual employment on the said 1st day of August in this same year aforesaid, shall not be or not have been, as hereinbefore set forth and described in and by the three immediately preceding sections of this Act, shall be and be held and considered as non-prædial apprenticed labourers within the meaning of this Act, and of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid, and as such shall be dealt with accordingly.

Apprentices may hold real and personal property.

6. And be it further enacted, that all apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, notwithstanding their obligation of servitude as aforesaid, by reason of their apprenticeship as aforesaid, shall be capable of acquiring by inheritance, or otherwise holding, enjoying and aliening all manner of property, real as well as personal, within these Islands, and competent to maintain and defend all manner of suits in relation to the same, as any other free persons within the same, and shall be duly amenable to all the laws of the Colony as others are or may be, and liable to be tried and punished for all contravention or violation of the same, or neglect of duties or the like, required by the same, in the same manner and form and to the same effect as other free persons, except only as is otherwise hereinafter provided in and by this Act, or has been provided by the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid.

May owe and be sued, prosecuted, &c.

7. And

How apprentices may be discharged from any expired term of their apprenticeship.

7. And be it further enacted, that when any person or persons entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall be desirous of discharging such apprentice from any unexpired part of the term of his or her apprenticeship, it shall be lawful so to do, by any instrument of writing to that effect under the hand or hands of the person or persons so entitled to his or her services as aforesaid, in the presence of, assented to and attested by some one or more justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as such in virtue of and according to the provisions of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid; and it shall be lawful, and the duty of such justice or justices of the peace, to withhold his or their consent to such discharge, should the person about to be discharged be above the age of fifty years, or labour under any such disease or bodily infirmity as would render him or her incapable of earning his or her own subsistence: Provided nevertheless, that should any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid be desirous of being discharged, notwithstanding his or her age or infirmities as aforesaid, and shall satisfy the said justice or justices of the peace as aforesaid that he or she hath the means of maintaining himself or herself, and that he or she is not likely to become burdensome to the country for subsistence, such apprentice may be lawfully discharged as aforesaid, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding; and any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, though not discharged as aforesaid, may depart from the Colony for any limited or indefinite time, and in any capacity, with the permission of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, and a passport or license to such effect from the Governor; and any such apprentice leaving or attempting to leave the Colony without such permission and passport or license, and all those counselling or in any manner assisting such apprentice in his or her unlawful departure or intended departure, shall be held and taken as guilty of an offence against this Act, and be proceeded against and punished as is hereinafter provided; but all such apprenticed labourers who shall be habitually employed in navigation, as pilots, mariners, fishermen, or the like, and registered as such in the office of the special justice of the district to which such apprentices shall belong, shall not be precluded from exercising their usual vocations, among and beyond these Islands, on any voyage whatsoever, with the permission and by the authority alone of those entitled to their services, any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

How claims for the discharge from any involuntary servitude by any apprentice to be investigated and determined.

8. And be it further enacted, that when any justice of the peace commissioned as aforesaid, shall from information to him given, have good reason to believe or suspect that any person held in servitude as an apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, who although registered as a slave before the first day of August in this present year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, was then entitled to his or her freedom, or that he or she since that time shall have, by any means become lawfully entitled to a release from involuntary servitude, as an apprenticed labourer, as aforesaid, such justice shall cause the person or persons employing such asserted apprentice to be summoned to appear before him, to defend his, her or their claim to the services of the said asserted apprentice; and in default of the appearance of the party so summoned, or some person or persons on his, her or their behalf at the time and place first appointed, the same party shall be again summoned, and if like default be again made, the said justice shall proceed in the matter ex parte; and if after a full hearing and investigation of the question in a summary way ex parte, or otherwise, and in which the contending parties or either of them may be heard by counsel, the said justice shall be of opinion that the apprentice is entitled to enfranchisement, as aforesaid, he shall give judgment accordingly, and cause a certificate of such judgment to be transmitted to the secretary of the Colony, to be recorded in a book to be by him kept for that purpose, but not until after the expiration of twenty-eight days next after such certificate shall have been lodged in his office; and if within the said twenty-eight days any party claiming the services of such asserted apprentice shall enter an appeal to His Majesty's General Court of these Islands against the judgment of the said justice, by lodging a document to that effect in the office of the prothonotary of the said court, and notice of such appeal be given to the said secretary, the said certificate shall not be recorded nor the judgment be of any effect until such proceedings shall be had thereupon, as is hereinafter directed; but if the said justice shall be of opinion that the asserted apprenticed labourer is not entitled to enfranchisement, the party claiming the services of such apprenticed labourer shall have judgment in the premises, with a right of appeal to the said general court by any party dissatisfied with such judgment.

Appeal from the decision of a Special Justice to the General Court.

Mode of proceeding of General Court in the premises.

9. And be it further enacted, that upon any appeal being entered as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for the said general court, if in time, or if in vacation for any judge of the said court to direct the justice against whose decision such appeal shall have been entered, to certify and return his judgment with the minutes of evidence upon which such judgment was founded, to the said general court without delay; and such judgment and minutes being so certified and returned to the said court, an order shall be made upon the first court day afterwards, for the trial of such apprenticed labourer's claim to enfranchisement by such form of action as to the said court shall appear most fit and proper; and the verdict and judgment upon such trial given shall be binding and conclusive against all and every person and persons who shall be a party or parties to the same: provided always, that upon good and sufficient cause shown, the said court may in any case grant a new trial.

In actions for enfranchisement, nominal damages only to be insisted on. Proviso.

10. And be it further enacted, that in any such action as aforesaid, the apprenticed labourer's title to enfranchisement, shall be only insisted on, and nominal damages only shall be awarded: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for any asserted apprenticed labourer, in whose favour judgment shall have been given in any such action, forthwith to have

An asserted apprenticed labourer obtaining judgment in such suit in his favour, may maintain an action for wages from the time he made known his claim to enfranchisement.

have and maintain another suit, and recover reasonable wages or damages upon a quantum meruit from the defendant or defendants, for such time only as it shall appear that such person had made known his or her claim or title to enfranchisement to such defendant or defendants.

The interest of one person to the service of an apprenticed labourer may be sold or otherwise transferred to any other person except at public auction.

Transfer to be in writing.

Such sale or transfer not to have the effect of separating man and wife, parent or child, under 14 years of age.

11. And be it further enacted, that the right, title and interest of any person or persons in and to the services of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall and may pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, gift, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, in like manner and form as a like interest in any goods and chattels or personal property generally may pass or be transferable, according to the now existing laws of the Colony: provided however, that no such bargain and sale, gift, contract or other conveyance as aforesaid, shall be valid, unless reduced to writing, and such writing be signed by the proper party, attested by one or more competent and literate witness or witnesses, and duly, in the presence of such witness or witnesses delivered to the party in whose favour such conveyance shall be made, save and except in the case of written and nuncupative wills, respecting which the laws already in force shall continue so to be: provided however, that any such bargain and sale, gift, contract, deed, conveyance or will as aforesaid, which if valid, would have the effect of separating any such apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, (such child being under the age of fourteen yerrs), or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, shall not, so far as relates to the transfer of any such husband and wife, parent and child, be valid or effectual in law, for any purpose or purposes of transfer whatsoever; and any person or persons executing and delivering any such unlawful bargain and sale, gift, contract, deed or conveyance, shall be held and taken as having offended against this Act; and on conviction thereof, shall pay a fine of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.*, to be recovered with costs of the prosecution, as is hereinafter provided: and provided also, that the interest of any person or persons in the services of any apprentices as aforesaid, shall not be subject or liable to execution or sale, under judicial process or otherwise, on account of any debt or damages for which a judgment shall have been or may hereafter be obtained against such person or persons; nor shall the body of any such apprentice, at any time during the term of his or her apprenticeship, be subject or liable to arrest under mesne process in any civil suit, or any manner of imprisonment under judicial process, on account of any debt or damage for which judgment shall have been or may hereafter be obtained against any such apprentice as aforesaid, under any circumstances or pretext whatsoever: and provided, that no such transfer shall take place at public auction.

Manumission invito domino.

Mode of valuing apprentices wishing to purchase their time.

12. And be it further enacted, that should any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, or any other person or persons on behalf of such apprentice, be desirous of purchasing his or her release and discharge from such apprenticeship, or so much of the term of the same as shall be at any time unexpired, and the party entitled to the services of such apprentice as aforesaid, shall not assent to such purchase; or should any difference arise between the party entitled to the services of the apprentice and the party proposing to purchase as aforesaid, as to the value or price of the interest of the party entitled to the services of the apprentice, it shall be the duty of any one or more justice or justices of the peace, specially commissioned as aforesaid, to whom the matter in dispute may be referred by either party, to cause two appraisers to be named, one by each of the contending parties; and should the appraisers disagree, then an umpire also to be named and appointed by the said justice or justices of the peace, and to summon the said appraisers, and when necessary the said umpire also, to inquire into and determine the value and fix the price of such interest as aforesaid, of the party entitled to the services of the said apprentice, and the party so entitled shall be bound to receive the price so to be fixed by the said appraisers or either of them, with the umpire as aforesaid, in full satisfaction of his, her or their loss of the services of the said apprentice for and during the unexpired remainder of his or her term of apprenticeship: provided however, that each of the said appraisers and the umpire, (when an umpire is required), previous to entering on the business of such appraisement, shall be severally sworn, fairly, justly and equitably, to the best of their skill and judgment respectively, to estimate the interest of the party entitled to the unexpired part of the term of the apprenticeship of such apprentice, with due regard not only to the general value of such interest, but also to any peculiar circumstances attending the particular case submitted, taking into consideration any special damages, loss or inconvenience to which the party entitled as aforesaid may be exposed, by reason of his, her or their being deprived of the services of such apprentice as aforesaid, and a minute of the proceedings as much at length as shall be necessary to show that the several forms above prescribed had been duly observed therein, being attested by the said justice or justices of the peace as aforesaid, and by the appraisers, or either of them, with the umpire as aforesaid, and recorded in the office of the secretary of the Colony, and the price awarded being duly paid or tendered to the party so entitled to the services of the apprentice, the said apprentice shall thereupon become and be altogether free and released and for ever discharged from all obligation of servitude by reason of his or her apprenticeship as aforesaid; and if on application to any one or more justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, by or on behalf of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, for an appraisement as aforesaid, with a view to the discharge of such apprentice as aforesaid, the party entitled to the services of the apprentice shall not within a reasonable time name and produce on his, her or their behalf, an appraiser duly competent and willing to act as such in the premises, it shall be lawful for the said justice or justices of the peace to name and appoint an appraiser on behalf of the party so entitled as aforesaid, and the appraisement and other proceedings thereupon, thereupon, as aforesaid, shall be had, and be to all intents and purposes as good and effectual as if such last-mentioned appraiser had been named and appointed as is herein first above provided for.

In case of joint proprietors, one of them to represent the interest of all, for the purposes of this section of this Act.

13. And be it further enacted, that when two or more persons shall be jointly entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, whose release from service shall be about to be purchased as herein above provided for, any one of the persons so entitled, being of full lawful age, and not labouring under any disability to transact his or her own affairs, shall be competent to consent to and make a valid and complete release of the interest of all those so entitled as aforesaid; and to discharge the said apprentice from all obligation of servitude, by reason of his or her apprenticeship as aforesaid, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes, as if the whole of those so entitled as aforesaid had joined in executing the said release and discharge as aforesaid; and when two or more persons shall be jointly entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, by or on whose behalf application shall be made to any one or more justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, for an appraisement and other proceedings thereupon, as is hereinbefore provided for, with a view to release and discharge as aforesaid without the consent of the party so entitled as aforesaid, notice of such intended proceedings on any one of those entitled as aforesaid, being of full lawful age and not labouring under any disability to transact his or her own affairs, shall be sufficient, and the person so notified shall be competent and bound to name and produce an appraiser, as is hereinbefore provided for, and for all and singular the purposes of this Act, in relation to such appraisement and other proceedings thereupon as aforesaid, shall be held and considered as lawfully representing in that behalf all others so entitled as aforesaid, to the services of the apprentice; and all the proceedings as aforesaid, in, touching and concerning the premises, shall be as good and effectual to all intents and purposes as if the whole of those so entitled as aforesaid had personally appeared therein; and when any person or persons entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall be absent from this Colony, or a minor under the age of 21 years, or insane, lunatic, or from any other cause incapable of transacting his, her or their own affairs, then the person or persons employing or being in charge of the apprentice, shall be held and considered as lawfully representing the party so entitled as aforesaid, and all proceedings had against or with the said person or persons so employing or being in charge of the apprentice, with a view to the appraisement and release from service of the said apprentice, as is hereinbefore provided for, shall be as good and effectual to all intents and purposes, as if the same were had against or with him, her or them, actually in the first instance so entitled to the services of such apprentice as aforesaid.

The husband entitled to the services of the apprentice of the wife.

14. And be it further enacted, that when any single woman, while entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall marry, her husband shall thereby become and be for ever after entitled to his own sole use and that of his executors, administrators and assigns, to all the rights, title and interest in and to the services of such apprentice, that shall have been of his wife at the time of the marriage; provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed or understood to invalidate any other dispositions of the said interests of the wife in the premises, by way of marriage settlement, or assignment or other conveyance to trustees, to the separate use of the wife or otherwise, executed at, before or after such marriage, by or with the consent of the husband.

Mode in which apprentices attached to the soil, may be removed with the consent of two Special Justices.

15. And be it further enacted, that in order to enable the employer or employers of any apprenticed labourer attached to the soil, to remove such apprentice from any one plantation, settlement or other establishment to another, with the consent of two justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, according to the provisions of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid, it shall be necessary that the said justices of the peace do certify their consent thereto, in writing, and deliver the said writing to the party desirous of making the proposed removal, to be by such party recorded in the office of the secretary of the Colony, in a book to be there kept for that purpose; and if any person shall remove any such apprentice without such consent, or on applying for such consent as aforesaid to any such removal, shall be guilty of any concealment or misrepresentation from or to the said justices of the peace, or either of them, whereby such apprentice shall be actually separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, (the child being under the age of 14 years), or any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, the person so guilty, on being duly convicted of such concealment or misrepresentation, on a summary trial of the case before any one or more justice or justices of the peace, specially commissioned as aforesaid, shall pay a fine of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.*

Such consent to be in writing and recorded in Secretary's office.

Penalty on persons removing without such consent or for concealment or misrepresentation, whereby husband or wife, parent or child, (under 14 years of age) are separated.

Task-work may, by agreement, be substituted in lieu of labour by the day.

16. And whereas it has been found generally beneficial to planters, salt-rakers and others, in lieu of employing their labourers for and during any certain number of hours in each day, to apportion to each labourer a certain task to be on every working day by him or her performed; Be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for all those employing prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, to propose to the whole or to a portion of those by him or her so employed at any one plantation, settlement or establishment, a plan or rule or rules of task-work, duly committed to writing, and setting forth the quantity and description of task-work to be performed by each labourer, on each and every working day, according to their respective ages, sexes, strength and skill; and if a majority of the said labourers of the age of 14 years and upwards, and capable of working, and actually so employed together at any plantation, settlement or establishment as aforesaid, or a majority of the same, shall signify their assent to such plan or rule or rules of task-work, so proposed as aforesaid, in the presence of one or more competent and literate witness or witnesses, who shall attest the same, the agreement so entered into, but not otherwise, shall be binding on all parties therein concerned, for such length of time as shall be agreed upon and inserted in the said agreement, not in any case to exceed 12 calendar months from the date thereof; and any employer of any such prædial apprentice as aforesaid, who shall exact in any one day, from any such apprentice, any more labour than shall be stipulated for as aforesaid, and any such apprentice not performing his or her task according to agreement as aforesaid, without a reasonable excuse for not so doing, shall be considered as offending against this Act, and liable to be tried and punished as is hereinafter provided.

Agreement not to endure for a greater space than 12 months.

When no agreement as to task-work is made, employers of apprentices not to work them more than nine hours every day, except Saturday and Sunday.

17. And be it further enacted, that when any person or persons employing prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall not propose any such plan, rule or rules of task-work as aforesaid, or should the said labourers, or a majority of them as aforesaid, refuse to accede to any such when proposed, it shall be lawful for such employer or employers to cause the said labourers to work at their lawful vocations for and during nine hours, and no more, in each and every working day, over and above and altogether exclusive of the usual intervals for meals and rest, which being different in the several different situations and services in which labourers are employed, cannot without great risk of inconvenience to those concerned, be here particularly limited or defined; and at all plantations, settlements and establishments, at which more than twelve apprenticed labourers shall be employed, the commencement of the hours of labour on each working day, shall be announced by the audible ringing of a bell, or the sounding of a horn or shell, but not more than 20 minutes before sunrise, and the close of such working hours shall be in like manner announced, but not later than at the time of sunsetting.

Holy days, on which no work is to be performed.

Exception.

18. And be it further enacted, that Good Friday and every Sunday throughout the year shall be kept holy, and no prædial apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or suffered to do any manner of work thereon, with the exception of those employed in the tending of cattle, or the conveyance of produce or stock to market by water carriage: Provided however, that no cattle requiring the constant attendance of persons shall be suffered to go at large in open pastures or elsewhere, upon any holy day as aforesaid, but shall be stabled, penned or kept in some enclosure, so that as little attendance on them as possible may be needful on such days.

Prædial apprentice exempt from working for his employer on every Saturday throughout the year.

Employers may hire their apprentices on Saturday, &c., by mutual consent.

19. And be it further enacted, that no prædial apprenticed labourer shall be compellable to work for or on account of his or her employer or employers, on any Saturday throughout the year, the remaining five days of each week, from Monday to Friday, both inclusive, being hereby declared to be the only working days in each and every week, within the meaning of this Act, either as relates to task-work or working by the hour as hereinbefore provided for: Provided however, that it shall be lawful for all persons employing prædial apprenticed labourers, to agree with any one or more of them, to hire them or any one or more of them, for pay at some stipulated sum or other remuneration for any quantity and description of work which such labourer or labourers shall consent to perform on Saturdays by the hour or by the job, or otherwise as shall be agreed upon; and when any prædial apprenticed labourer shall be employed in task-work as hereinbefore provided for, and there may be some spare portion of any working day in which he or she shall not be compellable to work for his or her employer or employers, it shall and may be lawful for such employer or employers to agree with such labourer for pay at some stipulated sum, or other remuneration, for any quantity and description of work that such labourer shall consent to perform, by the hour or by the job, or otherwise as shall be agreed on, within the spare time aforesaid of such apprentice after the performance of his or her task as aforesaid: Provided however, that no such agreement or agreements as last aforesaid, either as relates to voluntary work for hire, or Saturdays or during spare times after the performance of tasks in working days, shall be binding on the parties to the same or either of them, unless such agreement or agreements shall be reduced to writing, and attested by at least one competent and literate witness, in whose presence such agreement shall be entered into.

Agreement not binding on either party, except in writing duly witnessed.

Allowances of food and clothing to apprenticed labourers, viz. on every Saturday to apprentices above the age of 10 years, one peck of unground Indian or Guinea corn, or 21 pints of wheat flour, or 7 quarts of rice, or 56lbs. of potatoes, cocoas or yams per week.
One-half of the above to children under 10 years of age.
Domestics to be fed and clothed as prædials; or an equivalent substituted.

20. And be it further enacted, that all persons employing apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall provide and give to every such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, not being a domestic servant habitually employed as such, in actual attendance on the person or family of his or her respective employers, weekly, that is to say, on each and every Saturday throughout the year, the same allowances of food as owners of slaves are required by the existing laws of the Colony to supply to their slaves; videlicet, to every apprenticed labourer as aforesaid above the age of ten years, at and after the rate of one peck of unground Indian or Guinea corn, or 21 pints of wheat flour, or seven quarts of rice, or 56 pounds of potatoes, cocoas or yams per week, and one-half of the aforesaid allowance to every apprenticed labourer not being a domestic servant as aforesaid, below the aforesaid age of ten years; and all apprenticed labourers being domestic servants, shall be fed and clothed by their employers as prædial apprenticed labourers are required to be fed and clothed by this Act, or a proper equivalent shall be substituted to such domestics.

Employers of apprentices to provide them with wholesome lodging, and to allot to each above 14 years of age, one quarter of an acre of land conveniently situated,

21. And be it further enacted, that all persons employing prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall provide them with wholesome lodgings as has heretofore been usual, and allot to each of the age of 14 years and upwards, the entire use of some certain piece of good arable land not less than one quarter of an acre, conveniently situated on or near the plantation, settlement or establishment at which such apprentices shall be employed; and shall also furnish each each apprentice every six months; that is to say, immediately before Christmas and Midsummer in each and every year one suit of proper and sufficient clothing, or two suits at Christmas as aforesaid, and also one blanket or cotton rug once in three years.

and two suits of proper and sufficient clothing annually, or one suit half-yearly, and a blanket or rug once in three years.

22. And be it further enacted, that every plantation, settlement and other establishment at which any apprenticed labourers as aforesaid shall be employed, shall be at all times furnished with a sufficiency of all necessary medicines and extra nourishment fitting for the sick and convalescent, as has hitherto been usually kept, or ought so to have been, for the use of those employed at such like plantations, settlements and establishments as aforesaid; and all female apprentices bearing children, shall for four entire weeks after each childbirth be wholly exempt from labour of any kind, and on such childbirth shall receive from those employing them, for each newly born infant one pound of sugar or sirup weekly, for and during the term of six weeks after such births.

Medicine and extra nourishment for the sick to be kept on every plantation, &c.

The mother of every child born to be furnished with 1 lb. of sugar or sirup weekly, for each child, for six weeks after the birth.

23. And be it further enacted, that Christmas-day in every year, and the two working days (that is to say, not including Saturdays or Sundays), next after Christmas-day, shall be kept as holidays at every plantation, settlement and establishment where such apprentices are employed.

Christmas-day and the two following working days to be kept as holidays.

24. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for persons employing apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, to allow the said apprentices, or any one or more of them, being above the age of ten years, any quantity of land, and time for the cultivation of the same, as shall be agreed on between the parties in lieu of the provisions and clothing, or either, as is allowed by this Act, or any other equivalent of a like or different nature; and also, that it shall and may be lawful for those employing apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, in lieu of the above-named allowances of provisions and clothing and the like, to pay the value of the same in money at the rate of ten per cent. above the market price of the articles respectively, to such of the said apprentices as shall agree to receive the same, in commutation as aforesaid; and any such agreement in order to be valid, shall be in writing and duly approved of and ratified by some justice of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid.

In lieu of provisions and clothing, or either, employers may agree with their apprentices for an equivalent in land, time, money, &c.

Agreements to be in writing and approved of by some Special Justice.

25. And be it further enacted, that each and every offence not enumerated and set forth in and by this Act, as well as each and every offence in contravention of this Act, or any one or more of the provisions of the same, that shall be committed by the employer or employers or any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, or any other person or persons whatsoever, against the person, property or just rights of any such apprenticed labourer, or by any such labourer against the person, property or just rights of his or her employer or employers, or any other person or persons whatsoever, shall and may be lawfully tried, in a summary way, by and before any one or more justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, and the party tried shall, on conviction, suffer such punishment as is hereinafter provided; and the said justice or justices shall have full power and authority to issue all necessary process, in the nature of a warrant or the like, against the person and property, or either, in the alternative, or otherwise, of the party by him or them convicted, in order to carry into effect the judgments and sentences of such justice or justices in the premises, and compel the party convicted to pay the costs and charges of all such proceedings; and on the part of all apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, all breaches of the peace, all disturbance of order and good discipline among them, all indolence in or neglect or improper performance of work, all violation, evasion or disregard of contracts or agreements with their employers, all acts of insubordination, all insolence of language or manner to their employers or others, all disobedience of lawful orders, all injuries to the person, property, just rights or character of their employers or others, all attempts to injure the same, and all conspiracies or confederacies of two or more to commit any unlawful act whatsoever, shall be held and taken as offences against this Act, and the offender shall be punished accordingly; and in order to compel the attendance of all parties accused in the premises, as well as all necessary witnesses touching any offence as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any such special justice as aforesaid to issue all necessary summonses in the nature of writs of subpœna or otherwise, or other process in lieu thereof as is hereinafter provided; and all disobedience to such process shall be held and taken as an offence against this Act, and punished accordingly: Provided however, that the judges of the General Court and the commissioners of the Court of Admiralty sessions shall retain as heretofore, exclusively, their proper jurisdiction in all cases of capital offences, and prosecutions for perjury and forgery, and such other high misdemeanors as any one or more justice or justices of the peace in and for these Islands, who shall in the first instance take cognizance of the same, shall deem proper subjects for investigation in the superior courts of criminal justice as aforesaid within the Colony.

Trial and summary punishment of offences under this Act.

Judges of the General Court and Court of Admiralty Sessions to retain as heretofore their proper jurisdiction.

26. And be it further enacted, that any person or persons employing or having the charge or management of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, entitled to certain allowances of provisions, clothing and other necessaries, as in and by this Act is required, and in the same already particularly set forth, shall not provide and furnish such apprentice with good and wholesome provisions, clothing and other necessaries as aforesaid, in manner and form as in and by this Act is already provided, shall, on being convicted thereof by and before any one or more justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, forfeit treble the value of the articles so unlawfully withheld, and also pay a fine to His Majesty of not less than 5 l. nor more than 20 l., for the amount of which forfeiture and fine, with the costs of the prosecution, the said justice or justices of the peace shall cause to be levied, of the goods and chattels of the party convicted, by warrant under the hand or hands of such justice or justices of the peace,

Persons employing or having the management or charge of apprentices, not furnishing them with proper provisions and clothing, to forfeit, on conviction before any one Special Justice, treble the value of the articles withheld, and also pay a fine to the King of not less than 5 l. nor more than 20 l.,

peace, addressed to the provost marshal of these Islands, or to his lawful deputy, or to some lawful constable or other person or persons in the said warrant particularly named; and should not sufficient goods and chattels of the party convicted be found to satisfy the said warrant as aforesaid, the party convicted shall be imprisoned for the term of thirty days, unless such forfeiture, fine and costs as aforesaid shall be sooner fully paid, and the said warrant shall contain a clause to that effect accordingly.

Punishment of employers for offences against the person, property or just rights of any apprenticed labourer, where not otherwise prescribed, viz. fine and imprisonment, or either; fine not to exceed 20*l.* Imprisonment not to exceed 30 days.

27. And be it further enacted, that on the conviction of any employer or employers or other person or persons whatsoever, for any offence against the person, property or just rights of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, before any justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, the punishment of which is not in and by this Act otherwise particularly provided for, the party so convicted shall suffer fine and imprisonment, or either, at the discretion of the said justice or justices of the peace; the fine for any one offence not to exceed 20*l.* and the term of imprisonment not to be more than thirty days, and for such fine, together with the costs of the prosecution and imprisonment, the said justice or justices of the peace shall issue his or their warrant, in manner and form as nearly as may be, as is in the next preceding section of this Act particularly provided; and all such fines when received shall go to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, in aid of defraying the expenses of this government: Provided, however, that when any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall have good and sufficient cause of civil action against any person or persons whatsoever, or any person or persons shall have good and sufficient cause of civil action against any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, nothing in this Act contained shall be construed or understood to preclude any parties so aggrieved from pursuing their remedy respectively in the ordinary course of law before any court of competent jurisdiction: Provided nevertheless, that the judgment or sentence of any justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, lawfully given or pronounced in pursuance of this Act, or any one or more of the provisions of the same, shall be a bar to any such civil suit as aforesaid, touching the same matter of complaint, of which the said justice or justices of the peace shall have had cognizance, and in which he or they shall have given judgment, or pronounced sentence as aforesaid: And whereas it is expedient that all such actions as aforesaid of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid should be rendered as little necessary as possible; Be it further enacted, that when for any offence whatsoever against the person, property or just rights of any such apprenticed labourer, any justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, shall sentence the party convicted to any pecuniary forfeiture, mulct or fine (all which pecuniary forfeitures, mulcts and fines where not by this Act directed to be otherwise disposed of, shall go to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, in aid of defraying the expenses of this government) it shall be lawful for such justice or justices on the recovery of any such pecuniary forfeiture, mulct or fine, and before the same shall be paid into the treasury, out of the same to deduct, and to the party or parties in any such cases aggrieved to award and pay, or cause to be paid, such portion of the same as the said justice or justices shall deem a just compensation or satisfaction for the privations, losses or other injuries which such aggrieved party or parties shall appear to have sustained by reason of the premises.

Out of any forfeiture incurred for an offence against any party may be deducted a sum to compensate the party aggrieved for his privations, &c., at the discretion of the Special Justice.

Apprentices absenting themselves from their employers' service may be sentenced to work for their employers two hours for every one they may have so absented themselves,

28. And whereas it is necessary that proper regulations should be made for the maintenance of order and good discipline among the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual and efficient discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and the prevention and punishment of indolence or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer or labourers, and for the prevention and punishment of vagrancy or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourer or labourers, injury, or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer or employers, and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance to the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid; Be it therefore further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted before any justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, of absenting himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, without a reasonable cause to be shown to the satisfaction of such justice or justices as aforesaid, shall be sentenced to labour for his or her employer two extra hours for every hour in which such apprenticed labourer shall have been so absent; provided, that such extra hours shall not exceed fifteen in the whole, in any one week.

Not however exceeding 15 hours in any one week.

Apprentices absenting themselves for any time exceeding seven and a half hours in any one week, adjudged a deserter and liable to one week's hard labour.

29. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted as aforesaid of absenting himself or herself from the service of his or her employer or employers without reasonable cause to be shown as aforesaid, for any time exceeding seven hours and a half in any one week, shall be adjudged a deserter, and sentenced to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, in any house of correction or other place which the justice or justices before whom such conviction shall take place shall direct and appoint.

Apprentices absenting themselves without cause from the service of their employer for more than two days in one week, liable to be sentenced to two weeks' confinement and to 15 lashes.

30. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted as aforesaid of absenting himself or herself from the service of his or her employer or employers without reasonable cause to be shown as aforesaid, for two entire days during any week, shall be adjudged a vagabond, and sentenced to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, in any house of correction or other place as aforesaid; and in addition thereto, if the justice or justices as aforesaid shall deem it proper, to receive any number of stripes not exceeding fifteen.

31. And

31. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted as aforesaid of absenting himself or herself from the service of his or her employer or employers without reasonable cause to be shown as aforesaid, for one entire week, shall be adjudged a runaway, and sentenced to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, in any house of correction or other place as aforesaid; and in addition thereto, if the justice or justices as aforesaid shall deem it proper, to receive any number of stripes not exceeding thirty.

Apprentices absent one entire week without cause, deemed a runaway and liable to be sentenced to one month's hard labour and 30 lashes.

32. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer convicted as aforesaid of neglecting or refusing to perform for his or her employer or employers any labour required by this Act, or of performing any such labour indolently, carelessly or negligently, or who shall be found fighting or in a state of drunkenness, shall for the first offence be sentenced to labour in his or her employer's service for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week; for the second offence, to confinement with hard labour in any house of correction or other place as aforesaid, for any time not exceeding one week; and for the third or any subsequent offence, to confinement with hard labour as aforesaid, for any time not exceeding two weeks, and in addition thereto, at the discretion of the justice or justices as aforesaid, to receive any number of stripes not exceeding twenty.

Further punishments of apprentices.

33. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall by the careless use of fire endanger the property of his or her employer or employers, or of any other person or persons, or who shall wantonly injure the property of such employer or employers entrusted to his or her care, or who shall ill use the cattle or other live stock of his or her employer or employers, or who shall by wilful negligence expose his or her employer or employers' property to any damage or injury, shall, upon conviction of any such offence before any justice or justices as aforesaid, be adjudged, in the discretion of such justice or justices, either to extra labour in the service of his or her employer or employers for any time not exceeding fifteen hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour in any house of correction or other place aforesaid, for any time not exceeding one calendar month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty, or to any two or more of such punishments: provided always, that nothing in this enactment contained shall relieve or be construed to relieve any such apprenticed labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him or her done or omitted to be done: provided however, that no apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall be liable to be proceeded against by any civil action or prosecution for any of the offences aforesaid upon which any proceedings shall have been had against such apprenticed labourer under this Act, or the Act to which this is auxiliary.

Punishment of apprentices who, by the careless use of fire, &c., shall endanger his employer's property.

May, in addition, be prosecuted by civil action.

34. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his or her employer, shall, upon conviction thereof as aforesaid, be sentenced to any one or more of the punishments in the last preceding clause detailed.

Punishment of apprentices for contumaciously disobeying the lawful commands of their employer.

35. And be it further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer or employers, or shall agree together to make any resistance to such lawful commands, such apprenticed labourers shall, upon conviction thereof before any justice or justices specially commissioned as aforesaid, be adjudged guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be sentenced to confinement to hard labour in any house of correction or other place as aforesaid, for any period not exceeding three calendar months, with or without whipping, at the discretion of the justice or justices as aforesaid, such whipping not to exceed thirty-nine stripes.

Punishment of a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer on the part of any three or more apprentices.

36. And be it further enacted, that on the conviction of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid before any justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, for any offence against the person, property, just rights or character of his or her employer or employers, or other person or persons whatsoever, the punishment of which is not in and by this Act otherwise particularly provided for, the party convicted shall be punished in the manner following; that is to say, by public or private whipping, imprisonment of offenders of either sex at hard labour or otherwise, solitary confinement, and placing the limbs of the delinquents in the stocks, publicly or privately, or any one or more of such modes of punishment, as aforesaid, so that the whole taken together shall not be excessive.

Punishment of offences not before provided for.

37. And be it further enacted, that to carry into effect the sentence of any justice or justices as aforesaid for any of the offences aforesaid, he or they shall issue his or their warrant in manner and form as nearly as may be as is hereinbefore particularly provided.

Mode of carrying sentences into effect.

38. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that no woman shall be subject to be punished by whipping for any offence by her committed; but that in all the offences hereinbefore enumerated for which corporal punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying only to the case of males, and that all such offences shall, when committed by females, be punished by solitary confinement, confinement in the stocks, or distinguishing marks or dresses: provided, however, that no female apprenticed labourer shall be confined in the stocks after sunset or before sunrise, or for more than eight hours in the whole in any one day, or for more than two days consecutively, or for more than six days in the whole for any one offence.

Females not to be punished by whipping.

Substitution of other punishments for offences in lieu of those before enumerated.

39. And be it further enacted, that in lieu of or in addition to any of the punishments hereinbefore enumerated, it shall and may be lawful for the justice or justices before whom any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted of being a deserter, vagabond or runaway, or of neglecting or unfaithfully performing his or her proper work, or of any other offence against this Act (contracts for pecuniary payments excepted), to sentence the party convicted, to labour for his or her employer or employers for and during any number of extra hours, not exceeding three in any one working day, or 12 on any Saturday, or 15 altogether in any one week, for one or more weeks, at the discretion of such justice or justices of the peace, and on such particular day or days in each week, Sundays and holidays as aforesaid always excepted, as the said justice or justices shall consider an adequate compensation to the said employer or employers, for the loss by him, her or them sustained by reason of the desertion, absence, negligence or other offence of the apprentice convicted of the same as aforesaid, and a certificate to that effect, under the hand or hands of any such justice or justices as aforesaid, shall be a sufficient warrant and authority to the employer or employers of such apprentice to compel the performance of such extra labour as aforesaid.

Runaways to serve an additional time equal to the period of their having been runaways.

40. And be it further enacted, that when any apprentice or apprentices as aforesaid shall desert from the service of his or her employer or employers, and remain absent from the same without leave of such employer or employers for more than 28 days at one time without reasonable cause, and be convicted thereof by and before any justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, a certificate or certificates for such conviction for any such desertion or desertions as aforesaid, under the hand or hands of the justice or justices of the peace before whom such conviction or convictions shall have taken place, shall entitle the employer or employers of such apprenticed labourer to the further services of such apprenticed labourer, as such, after the expiration of his or her first term of apprenticeship, equal to the length of the time or times taken together (not exceeding seven years) that the apprentice shall have been absent once or oftener from the service of his or her employer or employers, by reason of the desertion or desertions of the said apprentice as aforesaid.

The hire of apprentices engaged to bring their employers' wages regulated by agreement; the same to be in writing, and attested by a Special Justice.

41. And whereas slaves have frequently been hired to themselves, under agreement with their owners, to maintain, clothe and in every respect support themselves, and also pay to their owners certain stipulated wages in money, weekly, monthly or otherwise, and it is expedient that the same practice may be continued, under suitable regulations, with respect to apprenticed labourers; Be it further enacted, that any such contract as aforesaid voluntarily entered into by the parties thereunto; that is to say, between an apprentice with or without the whole or part of his or her family, being infants under the age of 14 years, and him, her or them entitled to the services of such apprentice or apprentices, shall be lawful and binding on all therein concerned; provided that such contract shall be in writing, approved of and attested by some justice of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, and shall be limited to some term not exceeding one year at any one time, and not otherwise under any circumstances whatsoever; and it shall be the duty of such magistrate, before he approves of any such contract, to satisfy himself by due inquiry, that the party to be hired is or are capable of earning his, her or their own subsistence, and that the rate of wages stipulated for in the same is just and reasonable; and the said magistrate shall take and keep a minute of the substance and date of every such contract, to be at all convenient times open to the inspection of those therein concerned: provided, however, that any monies which may become due by any such apprentice under any such contract, shall be recoverable only in the same manner as if due by a free person not being an apprentice as aforesaid, and in no other manner whatsoever; any thing in this Act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Monies due under any such agreement recoverable only as if the party were a free person.

In case of tumult or riot, a flag may be hoisted by a Special Justice as a warning to the rioters to disperse, and if they do not disperse in 10 minutes after the above signal, liable to three months' hard labour in prison.

42. And be it further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace specially or generally commissioned to cause a flag or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited, as a warning to all persons then present to separate and quietly disperse, and all apprenticed labourers who, at the expiration of ten minutes from the exhibition of such flag or signal, shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall, on conviction thereof before any justice or justices specially commissioned as aforesaid, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour in any house of correction, or other place named and appointed by the justice or justices before whom such conviction shall take place, for any time not exceeding three months.

Such unlawful community to be dislodged.

43. And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any justice specially commissioned as aforesaid, that any apprenticed labourers have without lawful authority established themselves in any part of the Colony as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed on them by this Act, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required to cause any such community to be dislodged, and, if expedient, to cause any habitations there erected to be taken down and removed; and any apprenticed labourer convicted before any such justice of having been a member of any such community, shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour in any house of correction, or other place named and appointed by such justice, for any term not exceeding three months, and if any male, to whipping by any number of stripes not exceeding thirty-nine.

Penalty on apprentices unlawfully taking possession of any of His Majesty's land or that of individuals.

44. And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall without lawful authority enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty, or to any other person, it shall be lawful for any justice specially commissioned as aforesaid, upon conviction before him him of any such apprenticed labourer, to dispossess such labourer from such land and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same, with all crops growing thereupon, to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not within thirty days after such seizure appear and prefer his claim, then the justice as aforesaid shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon to be sold and disposed of by public auction, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid over by such justice to His Majesty's receiver-general and treasurer in and for these Islands, and shall be applied towards defraying the expenses of this government; and it shall and may be lawful for such justice as aforesaid, upon proof adduced to his satisfaction that such possession as aforesaid was taken fraudulently and with the knowledge that the party taking the same had no lawful claim to such possession, to adjudge any apprenticed labourer so unlawfully taking possession of any land as aforesaid to imprisonment with hard labour in any house of correction, or other place to be named and appointed by such justice, for any time not exceeding three months: provided always, that no summary process as aforesaid shall be resorted to in any case when any apprenticed labourer may have been two years in the undisturbed possession of any such land.

No summary process to be resorted to in ejecting apprenticed labourer from land in the undisturbed possession of which such apprentice may have been two years.

45. Provided always, and it is hereby further enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed or understood to preclude His Majesty, his heirs and successors, or the Governor of the Colony, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, from pardoning any offender, either freely and fully, partially or conditionally, who shall be convicted according to the provisions of this Act, or to remit wholly or in part any fine or forfeiture for which judgment shall be given in pursuance of the same; and when from any forfeiture or fine wholly or in part recovered or to be recovered, in pursuance of any sentence of any justice or justices of the peace as aforesaid, the said justice or justices shall award compensation to the party aggrieved, as in this Act is before provided for, such sentence as last aforesaid shall not be carried into complete effect, that is to say, as to the actual payment of such compensation as aforesaid, until the same shall be certified to the Governor, and be by him confirmed.

Not to prevent the Governor on behalf of His Majesty pardoning offenders.

46. And be it further enacted, that when any complaint made by any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid against his or her employer or employers, or any other person or persons whatsoever, to any justice or justices of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, shall after due examination appear to such justice or justices to be malicious, the party complaining shall be held guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punished for the same in manner and form as is in this Act before provided.

Apprentices making malicious complaints, to be punished.

47. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, who shall in any manner counsel, assist, aid or abet any other such apprentice in deserting or unlawfully absenting himself or herself from the service of his or her employer or employers, or shall knowingly harbour, conceal or employ, or assist in the harbouring, concealing or employing of any such deserter, and be convicted thereof, shall suffer the like punishment as if he or she had been the deserter; and all others not being apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, in the like manner offending, shall be liable to a penalty of fifty pounds, to be recovered, with costs of suit, by action of debt or other fitting form of action, at the suit of His Majesty, qui tam, in any court of competent jurisdiction, by any person who shall sue for the same, one moiety to Your Majesty in aid of defraying the expenses of this government, and the remaining moiety to the person prosecuting for the same; and all persons so offending, whether apprentices as aforesaid or others, shall and may be punished as aforesaid, although the deserter shall not at the same time be or at any time before have been tried and convicted for his or desertion as aforesaid.

Penalty on apprentice unlawfully aiding, &c. other apprentices in deserting from the service of his employer, or in harbouring, concealing or employing any such apprentice.

48. And whereas by reason of the great distance of many of the numerous Islands composing this Colony from the seat of government and from one another, and the great distance also of many of the plantations, settlements and establishments in the same Islands respectively one from the other, and badness or total want of roads within the same, and the delay therefore that may frequently intervene between the perpetration of an offence by an apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, and the opportunity of taking the offender before any justice of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid; Be it further enacted, that on every plantation the special justices shall appoint one or more of the apprenticed labourers thereon, with the consent of the master or manager, to be constables, who shall be empowered to maintain peace and order on such plantation, under the direction of the proprietor or manager thereof, and to secure and place in confinement any apprenticed labourer who shall commit any offence on such plantation, or any apprenticed labourer not employed on such plantation who may be found loitering thereon, without the knowledge or permission of the proprietor or manager thereof, such apprentice confined as aforesaid not to be kept in custody longer than shall be necessary to procure the attendance of the special justice: provided always, that if the attendance of a special justice cannot be procured within twenty-four hours, it shall and may be lawful for the proprietor or manager aforesaid to order the release of such apprentice so confined as aforesaid, after the expiration of twenty-four hours: provided nevertheless, that in the event of such apprentice being discharged as aforesaid, the proprietor or manager shall and he is hereby required to prefer the complaint on which such apprentice was confined before the special justice, when he shall next come upon the estate; and provided that nothing shall be construed to give to any such constable any power or authority over any of His Majesty's subjects, except such apprenticed labourers: provided always, that no person or persons entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, or any other

Power of such Constables.

Apprentice boys under the age of 14 years, and girls under the age of 12 years, may be chastised by their employer as children and youths in England may be chastised by their parents or guardians for petty offences.

other person or persons whatsoever, shall have authority to punish any such apprentice by whipping or otherwise, unless in pursuance of the sentence of some justice or justices specially commissioned as aforesaid, excepting only boys under the age of fourteen, and girls under the age of twelve years, who may be moderately chastised by their employers in the same manner as apprentices and other children and youths in England are, or may be there lawfully chastised by their parents or guardians, master or teachers, for idleness and other petty offences.

Apprentices may marry without any restriction from their employers.

49. And be it further enacted, that all apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, being single and of lawful age to marry, and not within the prohibited degrees according to law, may intermarry among themselves or with others with whom marriages may be lawfully contracted, and the same be solemnized by a minister of the church of England or of Scotland, or of some known religious sect, connexion or persuasion, or by some justice of the peace; and every such minister and justice of the peace shall, within twelve months next after the solemnization of any such marriage, transmit a certificate of the same to the secretary of the Colony, or some one of his lawful deputies, to be recorded in a book, to be for that purpose kept in the office of the said secretary at Nassau; and any such minister or justice of the peace neglecting so to transmit such certificate as aforesaid, shall incur a penalty of twenty pounds for such neglect, to be recovered with costs of suit, by action of debt, or other fitting form of action at the suit of His Majesty, qui tam, in any court of competent jurisdiction, by any person who may sue for the same, one moiety of which penalty when recovered shall go to His Majesty, in aid of defraying the expenses of this government, and the remaining moiety to the person suing for the same: provided always, and be it further enacted, that no marriage contracted by any female apprenticed labourer, shall confer on the husband any right, power or authority whatsoever, over or with respect to the wife, incompatible with her duties as an apprenticed labourer to her employer or employers.

Duty of person solemnizing any such marriage.

Mode of commanding the attendance of apprentices as witnesses before any Court or magistrate.

50. And whereas the said apprenticed labourers will be competent witnesses in all prosecutions, suits and legal proceedings, civil and criminal, in all courts of law and equity, in the same manner, and subject to the same laws and rules of evidence as other persons are or may be; and much confusion and inconvenience might arise were process directly addressed to such apprentices to command and compel their attendance as witnesses; Be it further enacted, that the process to procure the attendance of any apprenticed labourer as a witness, shall be in the nature of writ habeas corpus ad testificandum, addressed to the employer or employers of such apprentice, and commanding such employer or employers to produce such apprentice at the proper time and place for that purpose; and all courts civil and criminal, justice of the peace, coroners and others lawfully entitled to require the attendance of such witnesses, shall have full power and authority to issue such writs; and any disobedience to the same shall and may be inquired into in a summary way or otherwise, and punished as a contempt of the authority issuing the same, or as a misdemeanor; and any party aggrieved or injured by reason of such disobedience, shall besides have his, her or their remedy by action in the usual course of law, for all damage incurred by him, her or them in the premises: provided, however, that no such process in the nature of a habeas corpus ad testificandum shall issue, unless the party requiring the same shall by affidavit satisfy the court, judge, magistrate or other authority competent to grant the same as aforesaid, that the evidence verily expected from the intended witness, is material in the case to be tried or investigated, and that the presence of such witness is necessary to the purposes of justice: provided always, that no apprenticed labourer, as aforesaid, shall be competent to give evidence to any fact which may have been or may at any time previous to the said first August in the present year be committed, or alleged to be committed, and to which he or she while in a state of slavery would have been an incompetent witness.

The testimony of apprentices not to have a retrospective effect from 1st August 1834.

Apprentices not to be Jurors, serve in the Militia, &c., or hold any office, except that of Constables.

51. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall, during the continuance of his apprenticeship, be qualified or liable to serve as a juror in any court of justice whatsoever, civil or criminal, or on any coroner's inquest, or on any arbitration, appraisement or the like, or in the militia of these Islands, or be capable of holding any elective or other office or situation in His Majesty's service or otherwise, in or under this government (the situation of constable as hereinbefore provided for excepted), or of voting at any election for members of Assembly, vestrymen or the like, the qualification of such apprenticed labourers in other respects, or any thing in this Act before contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Unlawful for an apprentice to leave the plantation, &c. to which he belongs without leave.

Certain articles apprentices may not cultivate without leave.

52. And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, at any time by day or night, on working days or holidays, to depart from within the prescribed limits of any plantation, settlement or establishment at which he or she shall be employed, without the leave of his or her employer or employers, or after obtaining such leave, to remain absent therefrom longer than by the said leave shall be allowed; nor shall any such apprentice without like leave expressly given, presume to cultivate, raise or make for his or her own use any article of colonial produce whatsoever, Indian and Guinea corn or cattle or other live stock, hogs not exceeding two in number, and kept in a pen excepted, or salt or the like, that shall be cultivated raised or made at any plantation, settlement or establishment at which such apprentices shall be employed, for the use or benefit of those employing such apprentice; nor shall any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, without like leave as aforesaid, traffic or deal by way of purchase, sale, barter or the like, in wines, spirituous or malt liquors or the like, plain or mixed, or in any produce, goods or other articles in which the employer or employers of such apprentice shall deal or traffic at any plantation, settlement or establishment where such apprentice shall be employed: provided, however, that the prohibitions aforesaid shall shall not extend to the raising for sale or consumption of poultry, sugar-canes, beans, pease, pumpkins, plaintains, fruit, (oranges and pine-apples excepted), potatoes, yams or other ground provisions or esculent vegetables of any kind, and all prohibited articles as aforesaid which shall be so cultivated, raised, made or trafficked in by any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, without the necessary leave or permission as aforesaid, shall in and by virtue of this Act and the operation of the same alone, become forfeited to the employer or employers of the said apprentice, and be the sole property of such employer or employers, their executors, administrators and assigns for ever: provided always, that the restrictions aforesaid, as far as the same extend to prevent apprenticed labourers from raising Indian and Guinea corn, shall be of no effect in cases where any such apprenticed labourers may, by special agreement as aforesaid, engage to support themselves by the cultivation of land.

Person administering the government, to be deemed the Governor of the Colony,

53. And be it further enacted, that within the meaning and for all and singular the purposes of this Act, every person who for the time being shall be in the lawful administration of the government of these Islands, shall be taken to be the Governor thereof.

Who liable for neglects, omissions or misdemeanors under this Act.

54. And be it further enacted, that within the meaning and for all and singular the purposes of this Act, and of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid, the person or persons having the immediate management, care or charge of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, or employing such apprentice in any manner of labour, work or service whatsoever, whether for the use or profit of such manager or managers, employer or employers, or of any other person or persons whatsoever, shall be taken and considered as the person or persons liable to all the pains, penalties and forfeitures to be incurred by reason of any contravention of this Act in relation to the actual treatment of the said apprentices.

Fees of such Special Justices who may not receive salaries under the Act of Parliament to which this Act is auxiliary.

55. And be it further enacted, that every justice of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, not receiving a salary under the Act of Parliament to which this Act is auxiliary, shall be entitled to the following fees: on every examination in writing under oath, 2*s.*; on every warrant or summons in writing, 2*s.*; to each of the two justices on every permission to remove apprentices from one place to another, and making the necessary inquiries previous to granting the same, (payable by the party applying), 4*s.*; on each judgment (payable by the party against whom the same is given), 8*s.*; on the registry of each apprenticed mariner, 2*s.*; and all other magistrates and ministers of religion solemnizing marriages, shall for each, be entitled to 2*s.*; and when two or more justices are associated in the same duties, they shall divide the fees equally between or among them; and the provost marshal or his deputy, constable or other person specially appointed to serve or execute any process or perform any other like duty of him required by this Act, shall be entitled to the following fees: for every attendance on a magistrate at the investigation or trial of any matter or prosecution at which such attendance may be required, 2*s.*; for summoning any person verbally or in writing 2*s.*; for each arrest of the person otherwise than in the magistrate's presence, 4*s.*; for committing each prisoner, 2*s.*; for every mile that may be actually travelled on any duty, and for that purpose alone, 6*d.*; and the like, returning, when necessary; on all levies, settled without sale of the property levied on, two and a half per cent.; on all sales, two and a half per cent. on the gross proceeds.

Provost Marshal and Constable's fees on serving or executing process under this Act.

When property is levied on and cannot be sold to advantage on the spot, the officer levying at the request and cost of the owner of the property to transmit the same either to the Provost Marshal at Nassau or Turks Islands for sale, and prisoners sentenced to confinement on an Island where there is no proper prison, to be sent to Nassau, or to such nearer place where there may be a fit prison.

56. And when any property shall be levied on in any district in which it cannot be sold to advantage, the officer levying shall, at the request and at the sole proper cost, charge and risk of the party on whose property the levy shall have been made, transmit the same for sale to the provost marshal in Nassau, or the marshal at Turks Islands; and when any party is sentenced to imprisonment, and there shall not be any good or sufficient prison or other proper place of confinement in the district in which such sentence shall have been pronounced, the officer charged with the commitment of such prisoner shall cause such prisoner to be taken in custody to Nassau, or other nearer settlement at which there may be a proper place of confinement, and committed there: Provided always, that the appointed term of any such prisoner's imprisonment shall be computed from the time of his actual arrest or detention preparatory to his being sent to another district.

Gaoler's and Supervisor's fees.

57. And be it further enacted, that the gaoler or supervisor, or keeper of any prison, workhouse, house of correction or other like place of confinement, shall be entitled to the following fees for services under this Act; on receiving each prisoner, 1*s.* 6*d.*; on the discharge of the same, 1*s.* 6*d.*; on each whipping, 3*s.*; on each confinement in the stocks, 1*s.*; on each solitary confinement, 2*s.*; and 6*d.* additional for every twenty-four hours beyond the first twenty-four; for the maintenance of each prisoner by the day, 6*d.*; but all apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, committed to prison whether for hard labour or otherwise, shall be compelled as far as may be conveniently practicable to perform so much work as may be sufficient to pay for their maintenance; and all such fees and charges, when incurred on account of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, shall be paid by the person or persons entitled to the services of every such apprentice respectively; and all those on account of any other prisoner under this Act by the said prisoners themselves; and no such prisoner as last aforesaid shall be discharged from prison until the payment of all such fees and charges, except by order of some magistrate specially commissioned as aforesaid, who shall be satisfied of the inability of the prisoner to pay the same.

Fees, by whom paid.

Secretary's fees.

58. And be it further enacted, that for recording the several documents directed by this Act to be recorded in the office of the secretary of the Colony, and all other duties in connexion therewith, the secretary shall be entitled to the same or such like fees and allowances as are taken and held to be lawful, as to all other documents or instruments in like manner recorded in his said office; and all such fees, charges and allowances shall be payable by him, her or them for whose benefit the services shall be so rendered.

Fees not collected or received from the parties to be paid out of the public Treasury.

59. And be it further enacted, that in all cases in which no particular provision is made in or by this Act for the payment of any fees or charges as aforesaid, and also in all cases in which such provision is hereinbefore made, but from the inability of those appointed to make such payments, or other sufficient causes, the said fees or charges shall not be collected or received, all lawful fees and charges as aforesaid not actually so received, shall be paid quarterly to those entitled to the same out of any monies in the treasury of these Islands not otherwise specially appropriated by warrant of the Governor in the usual form.

No suit to be instituted against any Special Justice for anything done under this Act until 40 days' previous notice shall have been given and personally served on every person intended to be sued.

60. And be it further enacted, that no suit at law shall be instituted in any court in these Islands against any justice of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, or against any other person or persons whatsoever for any thing by them or any of them done, in pursuance or in virtue of this Act, or of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid, until forty days' previous notice of the same shall have been given and personally served on each and every person intended to be so sued, and such notice shall be in writing, signed by the party intending to sue, or by his, her or their attorney, and shall contain a full and particular statement of all and singular the facts, matters, causes and things for or by reason of which such suit is about to be instituted; and if after such suit shall be instituted, the party plaintiff shall introduce into his, her or their pleadings in the same any fact, matter, cause or thing not fully and particularly stated and contained in such notice as aforesaid, the said party plaintiff shall suffer a nonsuit at the trial of the cause; and at any time before the actual issuing of process in any such suit, the party defendant shall be entitled to tender amends to the party plaintiff, or to his, her or their attorney, for any cause or alleged cause of action in the premises; and the said party defendant shall also be entitled under a plea of the general issue, to give this Act and the said tender and all other special matter in evidence; and if the jury shall not by their verdict in the cause award to the party plaintiff a greater amount of damages than the sum so tendered as aforesaid, the defendant or defendants shall have judgment, and on judgment for the party defendant, whether on verdict or otherwise, judgment of non pros. or of nonsuit, or on discontinuance or abatement of suit the party defendant shall have treble costs.

Children under six years of age registered as slaves on the 1st August next, and children hereafter to be born of any apprentice, how bound out by indenture of apprenticeship until the 21st year of their age.

61. And whereas in pursuance of certain provisions of the statute to which this Act is auxiliary as aforesaid, all persons who on the 1st day of August in this present year 1834, shall have been registered as slaves in this Colony, and who on that day shall not have attained the sixth year of their age respectively; and also all those who after that day shall or may be born of any female apprenticed labourer or labourers as first aforesaid, during the term of the apprenticeship of such female apprenticed labourer or labourers, may be bound by indentures of apprenticeship until the said children shall attain the 21st year of their age respectively, as in and by the said statute is more fully and at large set forth; Be it further enacted, that all such indentures shall and may be executed in the same manner and form as has been hitherto used in such or the like cases in this Colony, and shall and may be transferable in the same manner as any interest of those entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers as first aforesaid may be transferred in pursuance of the provisions of this Act, and shall go to the executors of those to whom such children may have been bound as aforesaid, to such use or uses as may be designated by the last will of the persons respectively holding such indentures; or when there shall be no such will, then to the nearest of kin to the deceased, as any other chattel interest; and all apprentices so bound by indentures as aforesaid, shall, during their said apprenticeship, be entitled to the same treatment, and be dealt with in all respects from and by those to whom they may be so bound, and to the same allowances of provisions, clothing and other necessaries, and under the same penalties as is hereinbefore provided in relation to apprenticed labourers generally as first aforesaid: provided always, that no person entitled to the services of any such mother as an apprenticed labourer, shall be compellable to accept or take any such child or children as apprentices as aforesaid; and when any such child, being under the age of 12 years, shall not be bound by indenture as aforesaid, the father or reputed father of such child shall maintain the said child while under the age of 12 years, in the same manner as is hereinbefore provided with respect to the maintenance of apprenticed labourers; and the father or reputed father neglecting so to do when duly required by any special magistrate as aforesaid, if an apprenticed labourer, shall be punished for such neglect in the same manner and form (imprisonment excepted) as is hereinbefore provided with respect to any other neglect of duty; and if not an apprenticed labourer, then in such manner and form and to the same effect as is hereinbefore provided respecting those entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers neglecting to furnish them with good and sufficient maintenance; and should any such father or reputed father be unknown or dead, or not to be found, or from indigence and infirmity be unable to maintain the child as aforesaid, then the mother shall so maintain the child under the same penalties as aforesaid; and should any such mother refuse to declare under oath when so required by any special magistrate as aforesaid, who the father of the child is, or falsely represent any person as being the father of the same, she,

Persons entitled to the services of the mother not compellable to accept the child as an apprentice.

Children of apprentices under the age of 12 years not apprenticed out to be supported by their father or reputed father.

Penalty on female apprentices not declaring when required by a Special Magistrate who the father of their child is.

on conviction thereof, shall be punished in the same manner and form as hereinbefore provided, besides incurring the pains and penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury when any such misrepresentation shall have been made under oath as aforesaid: provided, however, that it shall be lawful for any such special magistrate before whom any claim for maintenance of any such child shall be brought, to agree with the parent or reputed parent of the same for a pecuniary computation, or the value in money of the necessary allowances as aforesaid of such child, to be paid weekly, monthly or otherwise as the said magistrate shall approve, to such person or persons as may be designated in the agreement, for the use of the child; which agreement shall be in the form of a recognizance to be entered into before such magistrate by the parent and one or more sureties, at the discretion of the said magistrate, and the penalties of all such recognizances when forfeited shall and may be enforced for each and every separate default from time to time, and toties quoties, in a summary way before any special magistrate or magistrates as aforesaid, in manner and form hereinbefore provided.

Lawful for the Governor in Council to establish forms for summonses, writs, warrants, &c. &c. &c. &c.

62. And to secure uniformity in the performance of the several duties to be required of special magistrates and others in pursuance of this Act; Be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council, to establish forms for all such summonses, writs, warrants, minutes of proceeding, records, indentures, agreements, contracts, licenses, certificates, notices and other instruments of writing, or so many of the same as shall from time to time be found or deemed necessary in order to carry into effect the provisions and intentions of this Act; and it shall be the duty of all such magistrates and others to conform thereunto in all proceedings had under or in virtue of this Act.

Modé of classing apprentices into prædials attached, prædials not attached, and non-prædials.

63. And in order to fix and definitively establish to what particular class of apprenticed labourers each shall belong; Be it further enacted, that when the last registration of slaves shall have been completed, the Governor shall appoint two inhabitants as assessors, with the registrar of slaves, to inspect and examine the several returns the said registration contained, and in the margin of the record (for which purpose a margin shall be left in blank throughout the same) to mark opposite to the name of each and every such apprentices the letters P. A., P. U. or N. P., designating by the letters P. A. those who shall appear by such returns to be prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil; by the letters P. U. the prædial not attached to the soil; and by the letters N. P. the non-prædial; and the proceedings of the said registrar and assessors in the premises shall at all times, while they shall be so employed, be open to the search and perusal of all persons entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, and also of any such apprenticed labourer or other person on his or her behalf; and when any doubt or question shall arise as to which class as aforesaid any apprentice may belong, the matter shall be inquired into by the said registrar and assessors in a summary way, and the decision of the said registrar and assessors, or a majority of them in the premises, shall be conclusive; and when the class of each and every apprentice shall have been so determined and marked as aforesaid, the said registration shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of the Colony as a public record, and no alteration therein shall be thereafter made under any pretext whatsoever; and each of the said assessors shall for their said services, to be certified by the registrar, be entitled to 12*s.* by the day for each and every day they shall actually be so employed as aforesaid, not to exceed 50 days in the whole, to be paid out of any monies in the treasury not otherwise particularly appropriated, in pursuance of warrants from the Governor in usual form.

Apprentices out without leave in New Providence after nine o'clock at night liable to be arrested by the night guard.

64. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the night guard to apprehend all apprentices that shall be found in the streets, lanes and other places of the town and suburbs of Nassau after the ringing of the gaol bell in the evening, incapable of giving any proper or satisfactory account of himself, herself or themselves, and without having any letter or letters, ticket or tickets from his, her or their employers; and to detain and secure such apprentice in the watch-house, guard-house, or other convenient and fit place, in order that he, she or they may be carried the next morning, or as soon as may be, before some magistrate specially commissioned as aforesaid, to be committed by him to the workhouse of the said town as a vagrant or vagrants, a suspected person or persons, or released or otherwise dealt with according to law.

Additional allowances to apprenticed mariners.

65. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed mariner shall be entitled to have and receive from his employer, in addition to the clothing hereinbefore prescribed, for prædial apprentices, one woollen suit in every two years; to wit, one woollen jacket, one flannel shirt and one woollen trowsers.

Unlawful for apprentice to have in their possession gunpowder, guns, swords, pistols or fire-arms, unless with the knowledge and consent of their master.

66. And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, to keep, use or have in his or her possession, any gunpowder, guns, swords, pistols or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapon, unless with the knowledge and consent of his or her master, manager or overseer; and every apprenticed labourer so offending, shall, on conviction before any justice specially commissioned as aforesaid, be punished with whipping, solitary confinement, hard labour in any house of correction or other place as aforesaid, or any two of those punishments as may be awarded by such special justice; provided, that such whipping shall not exceed 39 lashes, and such solitary confinement shall not exceed ten days.

Masters may seize fire-arms, in the unlawful possession of any apprentice.

67. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any such master, manager or overseer, or other lawful employer, to seize and retain to his own use any gunpowder, guns, swords or fire-arms of any description whatsoever, or any other offensive weapon unlawfully in the possession of any apprenticed labourer.

Act may be altered during this Session.

His Majesty may disallow any one or more entire Sections of this Act, leaving the remainder in full force.

68. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be altered, varied, amended or explained by any other Act or Acts to be hereafter passed in and during the same present session of the General Assembly, any law, rule, usage or practice of the General Assembly, or of either branch thereof, to the contrary notwithstanding: provided however, and be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, his heirs and successors, to disallow any one or more entire section or sections of this Act, leaving all other sections and parts of the same in full force and virtue, any thing hereinbefore contained, or any rule or usage in such behalf hereto before used and observed to the contrary notwithstanding; and so soon as His Majesty's said disallowance shall be officially made known and public in this Colony, each and every such disallowed section or sections as aforesaid shall thereupon immediately cease to be of any effect, and for ever after remain of no force or virtue.

AN ACT for dividing the Colony into Police Districts; for making provision for the Residence of Special Justices therein; for the erection of Gaols and Places of solitary confinement, the appointment of Gaolers and Constables, and for other purposes.— (Passed 20 March 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient for the better carrying into full operation an Act made and passed in the present session of the General Assembly of these Islands, intituled, "An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves;'" that the Colony be divided into police districts; that provision be made for the residence and travelling expenses of the magistrates having jurisdiction under the said Act; for the erection of gaols, the appointment of constables and gaolers, and for other purposes in connexion with the said Act: May it therefore please Your Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted, by his Excellency Blayney Townley Balfour, esquire, Your Majesty's lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief in and over the said Islands, the Council and Assembly thereof, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority of the same, That, for the purposes of the above-recited Act, the Colony shall be and is hereby divided into seven police districts, as are more particularly set forth and designated in the Schedule to this Act annexed, marked with the letter (A.)

One or more Justice or Justices of the Peace specially commissioned to reside in each District; not to exceed 20 in the whole.

Duty of Special Justices.

2. And be it further enacted, that in each of the said districts there shall reside one or more justice or justices of the peace, specially commissioned under the authority and by virtue of the Act of Parliament hereinbefore recited, so that the whole number of such special justices shall not exceed twenty; and it shall be the duty of every such special justice of the peace as aforesaid to make periodical visits to the several islands and places within their respective districts, in conformity with any instructions which shall be issued from time to time by the Governor; and in case at any time between the periods for visiting laid down in any such instructions, in consequence of any tumult, insubordination or other emergency, the presence of a special justice shall be requisite at any island or place in any of the aforesaid districts, it shall be also the duty of the justice of such district, without waiting for instructions, forthwith to repair to such island or place, and to exercise all such legal authority for the restoration of peace and good order as circumstances may require.

Special Justices to make monthly reports to the Governor of all complaints, &c.

3. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be the duty of every justice specially commissioned as aforesaid to make monthly reports to the Governor of his proceedings as such, and with the same to forward an abstract of all complaints preferred before him, and his decision or other proceedings thereupon, together with a list of prisoners within the island or district under his charge confined by his authority, and an account of the removals of prædial apprentices attached to the soil consented to by him.

Governor in Council authorized to unite two or more Districts into one, and again separate the same.

4. And whereas, from the want of a sufficient number of special justices being provided for this Colony, or from other causes, it may become expedient to reduce the number of police districts enumerated in Schedule (A.), by uniting two or more such districts or parts thereof into one distinct district, either temporarily or permanently; Be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, by Order in Council, to be duly published, to unite two or more such districts, or parts of two or more districts, as aforesaid, into one distinct district, and from time to time to revoke any such Order, and other or others, if necessary or expedient, to issue in like manner and form; and the districts defined in any such Order, shall be deemed to be the police districts under this Act, so long as such order shall be and remain in force, any thing in this Act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Fifty pounds allowed for house-rent for each Justice and two Constables.

5. And be it further enacted, that for every justice of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, there shall be allowed, for house-rent, for himself and two constables, 50 l. per annum, payable quarterly, by warrant on the public treasury by the Governor in Council, in the usual manner and form.

Each Justice to provide himself with two Constables.

Constables' salary of 50 l. per annum to be paid quarterly by warrant on the Treasury.

6. And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of every justice of the peace specially commissioned as aforesaid, to hire and provide himself with two able-bodied men as constables, to be under his directions and subject to his lawful orders; and that each and every person so duly appointed and sworn as constable, shall be entitled to have and receive out of the public treasury 50 l. per annum, payable quarterly, by warrant on the public treasury by the Governor and Council, in the usual manner and form, on such constable producing a certificate from the justice appointing him, that he has duly performed his duty within the period stated therein.

Expenses for hiring vessels, and for travelling by water, to be paid out of the Public Treasury; not to exceed in any one year 800 l.

7. And whereas it is necessary to provide for the hiring of vessels and boats, to convey special justices from one Island to another within their respective districts, or from one district to another, in cases of necessity, together with other incidental expenses of travelling by water of such justices, and the constables accompanying them in the execution of their duty; Be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor to pay the reasonable charges incurred for hiring such vessels and boats and other incidental travelling expenses as aforesaid, that may have been sanctioned or may be approved of by him, by warrant from his Excellency in Council, from time to time, on the public treasury of the Colony; provided that the amount so drawn for in any one year shall not exceed 800 l.

Mode of providing for the erection of gaols, and places of solitary confinement.

8. And whereas it may be necessary to erect gaols and places of solitary confinement on some one or more of the Islands within the respective districts aforesaid; Be it therefore further enacted, that whenever it shall appear to the Governor that any such necessity as aforesaid does exist on any Island, place or settlement within any of the districts aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for him, with the advice and consent of the Council, to order and direct the special justice residing in such district to cause any such gaol and place of solitary confinement, or either of them, to be erected according to such plan and estimate as may be approved of by the said Governor, and upon receipt of such order, such justice shall associate himself with some other justice of the peace; and it shall thereupon be lawful for such justices to make, regulate and levy, by warrant under their hands and seals, after due notice given, a rate, assessment or tax on the inhabitants of such Island, place or settlement, equal to the amount of the estimate so made and approved of, to be applied to the making, raising or erecting such gaol and place of confinement, or either, as may have been deemed as aforesaid to be requisite or necessary: and provided further, that it shall also be lawful for the said two justices to compute the amount of labour and materials necessary to the building of such gaol or place of solitary confinement, or either, that shall be taken as an equivalent for any part, or the entire amount of the rate, assessment or tax which any one person may be rated at or become liable to pay under this Act as last aforesaid: provided, however, that when any person residing, or having apprentices within any one of the said districts, shall be possessed of, and shall offer in writing, previous to any such rate being fixed, an approved building for a gaol or place of solitary confinement, such person shall thereupon be exempt from liability to contribute to any such rate, assessment or tax: provided further, that from and after the acceptance by a special justice of any such offered building as a gaol or place of solitary confinement, the same shall thenceforth, to all intents and purposes, be deemed and taken to be a public gaol, and used and dealt with accordingly for and during the continuance of this Act.

Governor may appoint a gaoler for each public gaol, with a salary at and after the rate of 30 l. per annum.

9. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor to appoint a gaoler for each public gaol, who shall receive a salary out of the public treasury of 30 l. per annum, payable quarterly, by warrant on the public treasury by the Governor in Council, in the usual manner and form, on such gaoler producing a certificate that he has duly performed his duty for the period stated therein.

Special Justices to make rules and regulations for gaols, places of solitary confinement, and the stocks.

10. And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of every special justice to make rules and regulations for the gaols, places of solitary confinement and stocks: provided that the above be not repugnant to the above-recited Act of Assembly and Act of Parliament, or either; and that the gaoler shall be furnished with a copy of such rules, and shall also placard a copy of the same on some fitting situation in or near the gaol under his charge.

Forms, when fixed on, to be printed for the use of the Special Justices, at the public expense.

11. And whereas, in and by the 62d section of the above-recited Act of Assembly, in order to secure uniformity in the performance of the several duties required of special magistrates, it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to establish forms for certain summonses and other instruments therein more particularly enumerated; Be it enacted, that all such forms when established, or so many of them as shall be required to be used by special justices, shall be printed from time to time at the public expense under the authority of the Governor, and lodged in the public secretary's office for distribution, and that payment for the same shall be made by warrant on the treasury in the usual manner and form.

Penalty on persons contravening or neglecting to perform the duties required of them by this Act.

12. And be it further enacted, that every person contravening any of the provisions of this Act, or neglecting to perform any of the duties hereby imposed on him, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable to be tried in the general court therefor, and, on conviction, to be fined and imprisoned, or either, at the discretion of the court: provided that the fine in any one case shall not exceed 10 l., nor the imprisonment thirty days.

This Act a public Act.

13. And be it enacted, that this Act shall be deemed and taken to be a public Act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such by all courts, judges, justices of the peace and others within this Colony, without being specially pleaded.

Act may be explained, &c. in present Session.

14. And be it further enacted, that this Act may be repealed, suspended, explained, amended or altered at any time during the present session, any law, rule, usage of Parliament or the Assembly, or either branch thereof, to the contrary notwithstanding.

The word "Governor" defined.

15 And be it further enacted, that within the meaning, and for all and singular the purposes of this Act, every person who for the time being shall be in the lawful administration of the government of these Islands, shall be taken to be the Governor thereof.

Act in force until 1st August 1840, and from thence to the end of the then next Session of the General Assembly.

16. And be it further enacted, that this Act shall continue and be in force from and after the passing thereof until the 1st day of August 1840, and from thence to the end of the then next session of the General Assembly of these Islands, and no longer.

AN ACT to provide for the payment of Salaries to certain Special Magistrates therein designated, and to repeal certain Clauses or Sections of an Act of the General Assembly made and passed in the fourth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves,' and to explain certain other Clauses of the said Act."—(Passed 23d August 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS in and by an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the third and fourth years of Your Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for Your Majesty to issue, or to authorize the Governor of any Colony mentioned or referred to in the said Act, in the name and on the behalf of Your Majesty, to issue under the public seal of any such Colony, one or more special commission or commissions to any one or more person or persons constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of any such Colony, or for any parish, precinct, quarter, or other district within the same, for the special purpose of giving effect to the said Act, and to any laws which may in any manner thereinafter mentioned be made, for giving more complete effect to the same; and by the said Act Your Majesty is authorized to grant to any person or persons not exceeding one hundred in the whole, holding any such special commission or commissions as aforesaid, and so from time to time as vacancies may occur, salaries at and after a rate not exceeding in any case the sum of three hundred pounds sterling per annum: And whereas, out of the one hundred persons so specially commissioned and entitled to salaries as aforesaid, three only have been assigned to act within this Colony, a number totally insufficient to carry into full effect and execution the said recited Act, and the Act of the General Assembly of these Islands auxiliary thereto; and it has therefore been necessary to issue to a further number of persons resident in the Colony, special commissions for the purpose aforesaid, to whom it is but reasonable and just that salaries commensurate to the means and resources of the Colony should be allowed; We Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the House of Assembly of the Bahama Islands, do therefore beseech Your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by his Excellency Blayney Townley Balfour, esquire, lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief in and over these Islands, the Council and Assembly in and for the same, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, That it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or other officer administering the government for the time being, and he is hereby authorized to grant to any persons, not exceeding seventeen in the whole, holding any such special commission or commissions as aforesaid, (and not receiving a salary under the aforesaid Act of Parliament), and so from time to time as vacancies may occur, salaries according to the scale laid down in the Schedule to this Act annexed, which salaries shall be payable so long only as any such justice of the peace shall be actually resident in the Colony, and engaged in the discharge of the duties of such his office, and shall be paid out of the public treasury of these Islands, by warrant under the hand and seal of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or other officer administering the government as aforesaid for the time being: provided always, that there be annually laid before both Houses of Assembly a list of the names of all persons to whom any such salary shall be so granted, specifying the date of every such commission and the amount of the salary assigned to every such justice of the peace.

Reciting certain clauses of Act of 4 Will. IV. c. 21.

2. And whereas, in and by the 55th, 57th, 58th and 59th clauses or sections of an Act of the General Assembly of these Islands auxiliary to the before-mentioned Act of the Imperial Parliament, it is enacted, that certain fees and charges therein particularly detailed shall be paid to certain officers therein mentioned; and that in cases in which no particular provision is made in or by that Act for the payment of such fees or charges, or from the inability of those appointed to make such payments, or other sufficient cause, the said fees or charges shall not be collected or received, they shall be paid quarterly to those entitled to receive them out of any money in the treasury of these Islands, not otherwise specially appropriated: And whereas the said fees and charges bear too heavily upon the parties applying for redress to the person specially authorized to carry the said Act of the General Assembly into effect, and by preventing persons from making such application, will be the certain means of depriving the people of these Islands of the benefits which would otherwise be derived from its numerous wholesome provisions, or from the numerous cases of inability of such persons to pay the same which will occur, the payment of such fees and charges out of the public treasury will prove an annual charge which the colonial finances will not support; Be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that each and every of the aforesaid clauses or sections of the said Act of Assembly, and every matter and thing therein contained, shall be and is hereby for ever repealed and rendered of no effect for any purpose whatever; any thing in the said clauses or any other part or parts of the aforesaid Act of Assembly to the contrary notwithstanding.

Certain clauses of said Act repealed.

3. And whereas in and by another section or clause of the aforesaid Act of Assembly, numbered in the printed copies, Six, it is enacted, that all apprenticed labourers in the said Act particularly described, shall be duly amenable to all the laws of the Colony as others are or may be, and liable to be tried and punished for all contravention or violation of the same, or neglect of duties, or the like, required by the same, in the same manner and form, and to the same effect as other free persons, except only as is in the said Act afterwards otherwise provided or has been provided by the statute to which that Act is auxiliary: And whereas it is also afterwards, in the 25th section of the said Act of Assembly enacted, that each and every offence not enumerated and set forth in and by that Act, as well as each and every offence in contravention of that Act, or any one or more of the provisions of the same, that shall be committed by the employer or employers or any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, or any other person or persons whatsoever against the person, property or just rights of any such apprenticed labourer, or by any such labourer against the person, property or just rights of his or her employer or employers, or any other person or persons whatsoever, shall and may be lawfully tried in a summary way by or before any one or more justice or justices of the peace holding a special commission, and on the part of all apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, all breaches of the peace, all disturbance of order or good discipline among them, all indolence in or neglect or improper performance of work; all violation, invasion or disregard of contracts or agreements with their employers; all acts of insubordination, all insolence of language or manner to their employers or others, all disobedience of lawful orders, all injuries to the person, property, just rights, or character of their employers or others, all attempts to injure the same, and all conspiracies or confederacies of two or more to commit any unlawful act whatsoever, shall be held and taken as offences against this Act, and the offender shall be punished accordingly: And whereas the said last recited clause appears in a great measure to contradict and amend the provisions of that herein previously recited, and it is necessary that the said last recited clause or section should be explained, and the jurisdiction of the special magistrates aforesaid be more accurately defined; Be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the powers and authority vested by the said last above recited, or any other clause or clauses of the Act of Assembly aforesaid, in the magistrates appointed for the special purpose of carrying into effect the said Act and the statute to which it is auxiliary, was only intended and shall be considered to extend only to offences committed or alleged to have been committed by any apprenticed labourer as aforesaid, or by his or her employer in such their relation to each other, or of the breach, violation or neglect of any of the obligations owed by them to each other, or of any question, matter or thing incident to or arising out of the relations subsisting between such apprenticed labourers and the persons respectively entitled to their services, and no other, unless any such special magistrate shall have been or may at any time be also included in the general commission of the peace for these Islands; and every apprenticed labourer as aforesaid is hereby declared to be amenable to all the laws of the Colony as others now are or may hereafter be, and with the above exceptions alone liable to be tried and punished for all contravention or violation of the same in the same manner and form and to the same effect as other free persons, anything in the said 25th section or any other part of the said Act of Assembly to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided however, that the body of any such apprentice, at any time during his or her apprenticeship, shall not be subject or liable to arrest under mesne process in any civil suit or any manner of imprisonment under judicial process, on account of any debt or damages for which judgment shall have been or may hereafter be obtained against any such apprentice as aforesaid, under any circumstances or pretext whatsoever.

Bahama Islands. (5 WILL. IV. c. 8.)

AN ACT to amend an Act of the General Assembly of these Islands, intituled, "An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves.'"—(Passed October 6, 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient that an Act of the General Assembly of these Islands, made and passed in the fourth year of Your Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves,'" should be amended; that more adequate and satisfactory provision should be made by law for giving effect in this Colony to the Act of Parliament to which the said Act of Assembly is auxiliary: And whereas the 48th section or clause of the said Act authorizes the appointment by the special magistrate on every plantation, with the consent of the proprietor or manager thereof, of one or more of the apprenticed labourers thereon, to be constables for the maintenance of peace and order on such plantation; and it is necessary that the responsibility and authority of such constables should be more clearly defined; May it therefore please Your Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by his Excellency Blayney Townley Balfour, esquire, lieutenant-governor in and over the said Islands, and the Council and Assembly of the same, That all constables appointed as aforesaid, shall be responsible for the due exercise of their authority as such, to the special justices of the district in which the plantation shall be situated, for which such constables shall be appointed, and to no other person or persons whatsoever; and that the power of any such constable or constables to confine apprentices for safe custody, shall, as far as regards the apprentices belonging to the plantation, be limited to cases in which others of His Majesty's subjects, not being apprentices, may lawfully be taken into custody by the ordinary constables; and to cases in which any apprenticed labourer having offended against this Act, or the Act to which it is an amendment, there should be reasonable cause to think that the offender will attempt to escape: provided always, and be it further enacted, that whatever complaint shall be made to the special justice aforesaid by any person, of the refusal of any such constable to perform his duty as such, or the wilful neglect of such duty, or of the improper exercise of his authority, such constable shall, upon conviction, after a summary hearing of the case, be liable to imprisonment with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding 14 days, or to dismissal from such his office, or both, at the discretion of the justice aforesaid.

Constables responsible to Justices for the due exercise of their authority.

Punishment of Constable refusing or neglecting to perform his duty.

All places of temporary confinement to be inspected and licensed by one or more Special Magistrates.

2. And be it further enacted, that all buildings used as places of temporary confinement on any plantation as aforesaid, shall be inspected and licensed for that purpose, by one or more special justice or justices; and it shall not be lawful to confine an apprenticed labourer in any other than a licensed place.

Stocks to be used in carrying into execution the punishment of apprentices, to be made according to a model sanctioned by the Governor for the time being.

3. And whereas by the Act of Assembly aforesaid, to which this Act is an amendment, it is enacted, that apprenticed labourers may be punished for offences by confinement in the stocks; Be it further enacted, that the stocks to be used in carrying into execution any punishment directed to be inflicted upon any apprenticed labourer by a special magistrate, or for purposes of temporary confinement on any plantation, shall be made according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the person administering the government for the time being; and it shall be the duty of the special magistrates to see that none of a different description are used in their respective districts.

Reciting 16th section of Act 4 Will. IV. c. 21.

4. And whereas in and by the 16th section of the Act of Assembly, to which this Act is an amendment, it is enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for all those employing prædial apprenticed labourers, to propose to the whole or to a portion of those by him or her so employed at any one plantation, settlement or establishment, a plan or rule or rules of task-work duly committed to writing, and setting forth the quantity and description of task-work to be performed by each labourer on each and every working day, according to their respective ages, sexes, strength and skill; and if the said labourers of the age of 14 years and upwards, and capable of working, and actually so employed together at any plantation, settlement or establishment as aforesaid, or a majority of them, shall signify their assent to such plan or rule or rules of task-work so proposed as aforesaid, in the presence of one or more competent and literate witness or witnesses, who shall attest the same, the agreement so entered into, but not otherwise, shall be binding on all parties therein concerned, for such length of time as shall be agreed upon and inserted in the said agreement, not in any case to exceed 12 calendar months from the date thereof: And whereas in and by the 19th section of the said Act, it is also enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for all persons employing prædial apprenticed labourers to agree with any one or more of them to hire them or any one or more of them for pay at some stipulated sum, or other remuneration, for any quantity and description of work which such labourer or labourers shall consent to perform on Saturdays by the hour, or by the job, or otherwise, as shall be agreed upon; and when any prædial apprenticed labourer shall be employed in task-work as therein provided for, and there may be some spare portion of any working day in which he or she shall not be compellable to work for his or her employer or employers, it shall and may be lawful for such employer or employers to agree with such labourer for pay at some stipulated sum or other remuneration for any quantity and description of work that such labourer shall consent to perform by the hour, or by the job, or otherwise, as shall be agreed on within the spare time aforesaid of such apprentice, after the performance of his or her task as aforesaid: provided, however, that no such agreement or agreements as last aforesaid, either as relates to voluntary work for hire on Saturdays, or during spare time after the performance of tasks in working days, shall be binding on the parties to the same, or either of them, unless such agreement or agreements shall be reduced to writing, and be attested by at least one competent and literate witness, in whose presence such agreement shall be entered into: And whereas it is expedient that further provisions should be made by law for guarding against improper practices in relation to such agreements as aforesaid; Be it further enacted, that upon each plantation, settlement or establishment at which any prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid shall be employed, there shall be provided by the person or persons having charge of the same, a book or books to be there kept, in which the special justice of the district shall enter the originals, or true copies, of all such agreements as aforesaid, between the apprentices and their employer or employers, touching task-work, and voluntary work for hire as aforesaid; and upon complaint made by any apprenticed labourer, who may be a party to any such agreement, in relation to any thing connected with or arising out of such agreement, it shall and may be lawful for any special justice or justices to examine into and ascertain whether the terms of such agreement were distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers, or (in cases of agreements for task-work) the majority of apprenticed labourers entering into the same, and whether such labourers, or majority of labourers, entered into such agreement freely and voluntarily, and whether the same is reasonable and just; and to make such adjudication in the matter as the justice of the case may require.

Persons having charge of plantations to keep books and enter all agreements.

Duty of Magistrates, on complaint being made, touching any such agreement.

5. And be it further enacted, that neither under the provisions of this Act, the Act to which this is an amendment, or the Act of Parliament to which the said last-mentioned Act is auxiliary, shall any apprenticed labourer be compelled or compellable to labour on Sundays, except in works of necessity, or in domestic services, or in the protection of property, or in tending of cattle; nor shall any apprenticed labourer be liable to be hindered from attending anywhere on Sundays for religious worship, at his or her free will or pleasure, but shall be at full liberty so to do without any let, denial or interruption whatsoever.

Apprentices not compellable to work on Sundays, except in certain cases herein mentioned.

6. And whereas in and by the 49th section or clause of the aforesaid Act of Assembly, it it enacted that the marriages of apprenticed labourers among themselves, or with others, may be solemnized by any minister of the church of England, or of Scotland, or of any known religious sect or persuasion, or by any justice of the peace: And whereas it is expedient that marriages of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, should be celebrated by such persons only as are authorized to celebrate the marriage ceremony between other persons of free condition: Be it further enacted, that such persons only shall be competent to celebrate the marriage ceremony between apprentices, as are authorized to celebrate the ceremony of marriage between other free persons; any thing in the said section, or in any other part of the said Act of Assembly, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Reciting 49th section of Act 4 Will. IV. c. 21.

Who shall be competent to celebrate marriages between apprentices.

7. And whereas the said apprenticed labourers will be competent witnesses in all prosecutions, suits and legal proceedings, civil and criminal, in allcourts of law and equity, in the same manner and subject to the same laws and rules of evidence as other persons are or may be; and much confusion and inconvenience might arise, were process directly addressed to such apprentices to command or compel their attendance as witnesses; Be it further enacted, that the process to procure the attendance of any apprenticed labourer as a witness, shall be in the nature of a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, addressed to the employer or employers of such apprenticed labourer, commanding such employer or employers to produce such apprentice at the proper time and place for that purpose; and all courts, civil and criminal, justices of the peace, coroners and others, lawfully entitled to require the attendance of such witnesses, shall have full power and authority to issue such writs, and any disobedience to the same shall and may be inquired into in a summary way or otherwise, and punished as a contempt of the authority issuing the same, or as a misdemeanor; and any party aggrieved or injured by such disobedience shall besides have his, her or their remedy by action, in the usual course of law, for all damages incurred by him, her or them in the premises; and the employer or employers of any apprenticed labourer attending under any such writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, before any court, justice or coroner as aforesaid, shall be entitled to receive from the party at whose instance such writ shall have been issued, the sum of 3 s. per diem for each and every day which such apprenticed labourer shall be detained from the service of such employer or employers in going to, attending at, and returning from any trial, examination or other proceeding, had before any such court, justice or coroner as aforesaid, together with any expenses attending the transit of such apprenticed labourer from his or her place of residence to the place of trial or examination; the amount of which daily allowance and passage expenses shall, in the first instance, be payable by the party, at whose instance the apprenticed labourer shall have been summoned as a witness; but shall finally be charged and taxed as costs against the party against whom judgment shall ultimately be given; and when any apprenticed labourer shall be summoned as a witness on the part of the Crown, the said allowance and expenses shall be paid out of the public treasury, by warrant, in the usual manner.

Process to procure the attendance of apprentices as witnesses.

Allowance to employers for the time any apprentices may be detained.

Unlawful for apprentices to absent themselves from any plantation without leave of their employers.

8. And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer, at any time by day or night, to depart from within the prescribed limits of any plantation, settlement or establishment at which he or she shall be employed, without the leave of his or employer or employers, or, after obtaining such leave, to remain absent therefrom longer than by the said leave shall be allowed: provided, however, that such prohibition shall not extend to prevent any such labourer from hiring himself or herself to any person whatever on Saturdays, holidays, and during any other leisure time such apprentice may have, after performing his or her allotted task or labour for his or her employer, or from attending at any place of religious worship on Sundays; and any such apprenticed labourer so found without the limits of any such plantation, settlement or establishment aforesaid, except for the purposes herein specially provided for, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained, and shall on conviction be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly.

Reciting 12th section of Act 4 Will. IV. c. 21.

9. And whereas in and by the 12th section or clause of the Act of Assembly aforesaid, it is enacted, that the appraisers and umpire to be appointed in manner therein directed, for the purpose of ascertaining the value or price of the interest of the party entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer desirous of purchasing his or her apprenticeship, or any unexpired term thereof, should estimate such value with due regard not only to the general value of such interest, but also to any peculiar circumstances attending the particular case submitted to them, taking into consideration any special damages, loss or inconvenience to which the party entitled as aforesaid may be exposed, by reason of his, her or their being deprived of the services of such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid: And whereas the law in that respect should be amended; Be it further enacted, that the appraisers and umpire (where an umpire is required) appointed as aforesaid to estimate the value of the interest of any party entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer desirous of purchasing his or her discharge from any unexpired part of his or her apprenticeship, shall estimate such value with regard only to the general value of such interest, and not with regard to any other circumstances attending the particular case submitted to them; any thing in the said hereinbefore mentioned section or clause, or in any other part of the said Act of Assembly, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mode of proceeding by appraisers to estimate the value of apprentices.

Employers, how enabled to remove apprentices from one plantation to another.

10. And be it further enacted, that in order to enable the employer or employers of any apprenticed labourer attached to the soil to remove such apprentice from any one plantation, settlement or other establishment to another, with the consent of two special justices, according to the provisions of the statute to which the Act, to which this is an amendment, is auxiliary, it shall be necessary that the said justices of the peace do certify their consent thereto in writing, and deliver the said writing to the party desirous of making the proposed removal, and shall record the same in a book to be kept by them for that purpose; and if any person shall remove any such apprentice without such consent, or on applying for such consent as aforesaid to any such removal, shall be guilty of any concealment or misrepresentation from or to the said justices, or either of them, whereby such apprentice shall be actually separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, the person so guilty, on being duly convicted, on a summary trial of the case before any one or more special justice or justices, shall pay a fine of not less than 10 l. nor more than 20 l.

Services of apprentices may be transferred.

11. And be it further enacted, that the right, title and interest of any person and persons in and to the services of any apprenticed labourer, shall and may pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, gift, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, in like manner and form as a like interest in any goods and chattels or personal property generally may pass or be transferable, according to the now existing laws of the Colony: provided, however, that no such bargain and sale, gift, contract or other conveyance as aforesaid, shall be valid unless reduced by writing, and such writing be signed by the proper party, attested by one or more competent and literate witness or witnesses, and duly, in the presence of such witness or witnesses, delivered to the party in whose favour such conveyance shall be made, save and excepting in the case of written and nuncupative wills, respecting which the laws already in force shall continue so to be: provided also, that any such bargain and sale, gift, contract, deed, conveyance or will, which if valid would have the effect of separating any such apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, shall not, as far as relates to the transfer of any such husband and wife, parent and child, be valid or effectual in law for any purpose or purposes of transfer whatsoever; and any person or persons executing and delivering any such unlawful bargain and sale, gift, contract, deed or conveyance, shall be held and taken as having offended against this Act, and, on conviction thereof, shall pay a fine of not less than 10 l. nor more than 20 l.: and provided also, that the interest of any person or persons to the services of any apprenticed labourer, shall not be subject or liable to be transferred at public auction, except under judicial process or otherwise, on account of any debt or damage for which a judgment shall have been or may hereafter be obtained against such person or persons; nor shall the body of any apprenticed labourer, at any time during the term of his or her apprenticeship, be subject or liable to arrest under mesne process in any civil suit, or any manner of imprisonment under judicial process, on account of any debt or damage for which judgment shall have been or may hereafter be obtained against any such apprentice, under any circumstances or pretext whatsoever.

Proviso.

12. And

12. And be it further enacted, that nothing contained in the Act of Assembly to which this Act is an amendment, shall extend or be construed to extend to absolve apprenticed labourers from the duty of serving in any military or civil capacity to which they may be called by the Governor, or other person administering the government for the time being, in cases of invasion, rebellion, or any other great public exigency; nor to incapacitate any apprenticed labourer from holding any office in the service of any corporation or body politic, or in any church or ecclesiastical society, so that the duties of such office do not interfere with the proper performance of the service which such apprenticed labourer owes to his or her employer or employers.

Nothing to extend to absolve apprentices from serving in any military or civil capacity.

13. And whereas it is necessary that several sections and parts of sections of the aforesaid Act of Assembly, and every other part of the said Act hereby altered and amended, should be repealed: Be it further enacted, that from and after the passing hereof, all that part of the 48th section of the said Act which authorizes the chastisement of apprentice boys under the age of fourteen years, and apprentice girls under the age of twelve years, by their employer; also the whole of the 11th, 15th, 49th and 50th sections of the said Act, and also such portions of the 18th and 12th sections, and such other portions of the said Act, which are opposed to or contradictory to any matter or thing in this Act contained, shall be and are hereby declared to be repealed and of no virtue; any thing in the said sections, or any other part of the said Act of Assembly, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Present, The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS an Act hath been made and passed by the Lieutenant-Governor, Council and Assembly of the Bahama Islands, on the 15th day of February 1834, intituled, "An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves.'"

And whereas it is by the said Act of General Assembly (amongst other things) provided and enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, his heirs and successors, to disallow any one or more entire section or sections of the said Act, leaving all other sections or parts of the same in full force and virtue; any thing thereinbefore contained, or any rule or usage in such behalf heretofore used and observed, to the contrary notwithstanding: And that so soon as His Majesty's said disallowance shall be officially made known and public in the said Colony, each and every such disallowed section or sections as aforesaid shall thereupon immediately cease to be of any effect, and for ever after remain of no force or virtue:

And whereas the said Act of General Assembly has been referred to the Committee of the Lords of His Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, appointed for the consideration of all matters relating to Trade and Foreign Plantations; and the said Lords of the Committee have reported as their opinion to His Majesty, that the said Act should be left to its operation, except as to the several sections of the said Act, which are enumerated and set forth in the Schedule hereunto annexed; which sections their Lordships are of opinion should be disallowed; His Majesty was thereupon this day pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to approve of the said Report; and His Majesty was further pleased, in pursuance of the above recited Act of General Assembly, and in exercise of the power thereby in His Majesty in that behalf vested, and by and with the advice aforesaid, to declare his disallowance of so much and such sections of the said Act of General Assembly, as are recited and set forth at length in the Schedule hereto annexed, and the same are hereby disallowed accordingly.

And the Right honourable the Lord Glenelg, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

AN ACT to repeal the Laws exclusively applicable to free Black and free Coloured Persons, and extend to them the Laws applicable to White Persons, and to fix the Qualification for Jurors, Voters, and the Electors and Candidates for certain Offices and places of Trust.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to relieve free blacks and free persons of colour from certain disabilities, liabilities and restrictions to which they are now subject, and extend to them the laws now applicable to white persons, and to fix the qualification for jurors, voters, and the electors and candidates for certain offices and places of trust: We, therefore, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the General Assembly of these Your Majesty's Bermuda or Somers' Islands, do most humbly beseech Your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by Your Majesty's Governor, Council and Assembly, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That upon and from and after the 1st day of August, in the year of our Lord 1834, the Act passed in the year 1827, and since continued, intituled, "An Act to ameliorate the condition of Slaves and free Persons of colour;" and also the Act passed in the year 1764, intituled, "An Act for the better government of Negroes, Mulattoes and Indians, bond or free, and for the more effectual punishing Conspiracies and Insurrections of them," and every other enactment in any Act of the Legislature of these Islands, imposing upon black or coloured persons, either bond or free, any penalty, duty, disability or liability to which white persons are not subject by law, or taking away from black or coloured persons, either bond or free, any right, privilege or franchise, from which white persons are not excluded, be and the same are hereby repealed.

All enactments operating against black and coloured persons exclusively are repealed.

All rights, privileges and franchises enjoyed by white persons to be extended to black and coloured persons.

And be it further enacted, that all rights, privileges and franchises, which upon and from and after the said 1st day of August shall or may be enjoyed by white persons, shall upon, from and after the said 1st day of August, be equally enjoyed by free black and coloured persons; and that upon, from and after the said 1st day of August, all free black and coloured persons shall be subject and liable to all the pains, penalties, duties, conditions, restrictions, disabilities and liabilities to which white persons shall be subject and liable.

Qualification to vote for a Member of the Genera Assembly

And whereas, by the enactments hereinbefore repealed, free black and coloured persons are altogether excluded from certain offices and places of trust, and from the exercise of certain franchises, which by the operation of this Act they may enjoy, upon, from and after the 1st day of August 1834; and it is expedient that the amount of property qualifying all persons, as well white as black and coloured, for the enjoyment of such offices, places and franchises, should be fixed by law; Therefore be it further enacted, that upon and from and after the said 1st day of August, no person shall be capable of voting in the election of a member to serve in the General Assembly, who shall not possess in his own right, within the parish to be represented, or receive the profits to his own use, of a freehold rated at the last parish assessment, at not less than 100*l.* of current money, instead of 40*l.*, as now required by the Act passed in the year 1789, for regulating the election of members to serve in the General Assembly, and who shall not in all other respects conform to the prescriptions of the said Act.

Qualification for a Member of the General Assembly.

And be it further enacted, that upon, from and after the said 1st day of August, no person, not possessing in his own right within the parish to be represented, or receiving the profits to his own use, of a freehold rated at the last parish assessment, at not less than 400*l.* instead of 200*l.* as now required by the Act aforesaid, and not in all other respects conforming to the prescriptions of the said Act, shall be capable of being elected to serve as a member in the General Assembly.

Qualification to vote for Mayor, Alderman or Common Councilman.

And be it further enacted, that upon, from and after the said 1st day of August, no person shall be capable of voting in the election of a mayor, alderman or common councilman for the town of Hamilton or the town of St. George, who shall not possess in his own right, or receive to his own use, the profits of a freehold within the town to which such vote may refer, rated at the last parish assessment at not less than 100*l.*

Qualification for Mayor, Alderman or Common Councilman.

And be it further enacted, that upon, from and after the said 1st day of August, no person not possessing in his own right, or receiving the profits to his own use, of a freehold within the town to which such election shall refer, rated at the last parish assessment at not less than 400*l.*, shall be capable of being elected as mayor, alderman or common councilman for either of the said towns of Hamilton or St. George.

Qualification to vote for Vestryman, Churchwarden or Constable.

And be it further enacted, that upon and from and after the said 1st day of August, no person shall be capable of voting in the election of any vestryman, churchwarden or constable, in any parish in these Islands, or at any parish meeting for the voting of money or bringing any charge or expense upon the parish, unless such person, at the time of such voting, shall be possessed in his own right, or receive to his own use, the profits of real estate within such parish rated at the last parish assessment at not less than 100*l.*, or if less than 100*l.*, then also possessed in his own right of personal estate within such parish rated as aforesaid, at such amount as, together with such real estate, shall not be less than 100*l.*, or if not possessed or receiving the profits to his own use of any such real estate as aforesaid, then possessed in his own right, of personal estate assessed as aforesaid, at not less than 100*l.*: always provided, that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to deprive the rector of any parish of any right which he may now lawfully exercise in right of his benefice.

Qualification for Vestryman or Churchwarden.

And be it further enacted, that upon, from and after the said 1st day of August, no person shall be capable of being elected a vestryman or churchwarden in any parish in these Islands, unless such person at the time of such election shall be possessed in his own right, or receive the profits to his own use, of real estate within such parish, rated at the last parish assessment at not less than 200*l.*, or if less than 200*l.*, then also possessed in his own right, of personal estate within such parish rated as aforesaid, at such amount as, together with such real estate, may be not less than 200*l.*, or if not possessed or receiving the profits to his own use, of any such real estate as aforesaid, then possessed in his own right of personal estate assessed as aforesaid, at not less then 200*l.*

Qualification for Jurors.

And whereas by an Act passed by the Legislature of these Islands on the 7th day of March 1738-9, for regulating jurors to serve in the several courts for these Islands, a register is required to be kept in each parish, wherein shall be written the names of all the parishoners of each respective parish qualified to serve as jurors, who are thereby required to be men of reputed integrity and whose estates respectively are worth not less than 40*l.* sterling (or 60*l.* of current money,) from which register the jurors are to be returned to serve in the several courts of these Islands; and it is expedient that the qualification of jurors fixed by the said Act should be raised beyond the amount of property there required; Be it further enacted, that the register to be kept as aforesaid shall from and after the said 1st day of August comprehend the names of all literate persons, being good and lawful men, and being parishioners whose estates shall be worth not less than 100*l.* of current money (instead of 40*l.* sterling as aforesaid); and that no person shall be returnable for or deemed qualified to serve as a juror in any of the courts of judicature in these Islands, other than persons qualified as hereinbefore mentioned, and who shall be in all other respects qualified as required by law.

And be it further enacted, that from and after the said 1st day of August no jury de meditate linguæ, shall be allowed by any court of judicature in these Islands, nor shall any challenge or exception be allowed for want of any jury de meditate linguæ.

No. 76.

—No. 76.—

Bermuda.

At the Court at St. James's, 31st July 1835:

Present, The King's most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Whereas by an Act passed in the third and fourth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," after reciting, amongst other things, that it would be desirable that such of the provisions of the said Act as related to the internal concerns of the said respective Colonies, should be enacted in such respective Colonies, as far as might be possible, by the authority of the several local legislatures of such Colonies respectively, it is enacted, that in case the Governor, Council and Assembly of any one or more of His Majesty's Colonies should, by any Act or Acts of General Assembly for that purpose made, substitute for the several enactments thereinbefore contained, or any of them, any enactments accomplishing the several objects in such thereinbefore contained enactments respectively contemplated, as fully and to the like effect, but in a manner and form better adapted to the local circumstances of any such Colonies or Colony; and in case His Majesty should by any Order or Orders to be by him made, by the advice of his Privy Council, confirm and allow any such Act or Acts of Assembly, and should in and by any such Order or Orders in Council, recite and set forth at length the several provisions and enactments of the said Act of Parliament for which such other enactments as aforesaid should have been substituted by any such Act or Acts of General Assembly, then and in such case so much and such parts of the said Act of Parliament as should be so recited and set forth at length in any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council, should be suspended and cease to be of any force or effect in any such Colony from and after the arrival and proclamation therein of any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council, and should continue to be so suspended so long as any such substituted enactment should continue in force and unrepealed, and no longer.

And whereas the Governor, Council and Assembly of the Colony of Bermuda have, by a certain Act of General Assembly for that purpose made, bearing date the 10th day of February 1834, substituted for such of the several enactments in the said Act of Parliament contained, so far as the same relate to the apprenticeship of the labourers therein mentioned, certain certain other enactments accomplishing the several objects in the said last-mentioned enactments of the said Act of Parliament respectively contemplated, as fully and to the like effect as the same are accomplished by the said Act of Parliament, but in a manner and form better adapted to the local circumstances of the said Colony of Bermuda: Now, therefore, in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament, and in exercise of the powers thereby in His Majesty in that behalf vested, His Majesty, by the advice of his Privy Council, doth confirm and allow the said Act of General Assembly; and it is further declared by the authority aforesaid, that so much and such parts of the said Act of Parliament as are recited and set forth at length in the schedule hereto annexed, are the provisions and enactments of the said Act of Parliament for which such other enactments have been substituted by the said Act of Assembly; His Majesty doth, therefore, by the advice aforesaid declare, that so much and such parts of the said Act of Parliament as are so recited and set forth at length in the schedule hereto annexed, shall be suspended, and cease to be of any force and effect in the said Colony of Bermuda from and after the arrival and proclamation therein of this present order, and shall continue to be so suspended so long as such substituted enactments shall continue in force and unrepealed, and no longer.

And the Right honourable the Lord Glenelg, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

Note.—The sections suspended by this order, are the first twenty-two of the Act of Parliament 3d & 4th Will. IV. cap. 73, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, &c.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

B. D'URBAN.

ORDINANCE enacted by the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council thereof, for giving due effect to the Provisions of an Act of Parliament passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," and dated the 28th day of August 1833.

WHEREAS by a certain Act of Parliament passed in the third and fourth years of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it is amongst other things recited, that it is necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for the good order, management, maintenance and proper treatment of the apprenticed labourers within the said Colonies; for fixing the jurisdiction and procedure of special justices, and for defining the reciprocal duties and rights of employers and their labourers, and for the punishment of offences; and that such rules and regulations may be made and contained in any ordinance to be enacted by the Governor and local Legislatures of the respective Colonies: provided nevertheless, and it is thereby enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any such Governor, Council and Assembly, or for any such local Legislature, or for His Majesty in Council, by any such Acts of Assembly, Ordinances, or Orders in Council as aforesaid, to make or establish any enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order, which shall be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to the said Act, or any part thereof, but that every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order shall be and is thereby declared to be absolutely null and void and of no effect;

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament, and for carrying the same into effect within the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope; Be it enacted by the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council thereof, that the several rules and regulations hereinafter mentioned shall extend to and be in force within the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope and the dependencies thereof, upon, from and after the 1st day of December 1834.

CAP. I.—On the Judicial and Ministerial Agency to be employed.

1. The Colony of the Cape of Good Hope shall, for the purposes of this ordinance, be divided into not more than 22 special districts.

2. The Governor shall by proclamation define, and, as occasion may require, alter the limits of such districts.

3. One special justice shall be appointed to each of the districts.

4. In each district, and in the vicinity of as large a body as may be of the apprenticed labouring population thereof, there shall be one or more police settlements.

5. The Governor shall provide for the formation of such police settlements by the erection, hire or appropriating of such public buildings for that purpose as he shall from time to time see fit and necessary.

6. At each police settlement there shall be a house of correction, and, if necessary, and when secure accommodation shall be provided, a penal gang, to be composed of such labourers as shall be condemned to imprisonment with hard labour.

7. Every such police settlement shall be under the charge of the justice of the district, and shall consist of so many police serjeants and police constables as the Governor shall from time to time see fit to authorize; all being able-bodied men between the ages of 20 and 50 years.

8. The police serjeants and police constables shall be appointed by the justice, and may be removed by him for misconduct or inefficiency.

9. In addition to the police force, and when the same shall be insufficient for maintaining peace and good order among the labourers, the justices shall appoint and swear in such persons or such labourers in their respective districts as they shall think fit, to act for the time being as special constables or officers of the peace.

10. It shall be the duty of the serjeant and constables to carry into execution such orders as they shall receive from the justices for the prevention or repressing of crimes, and for enforcing obedience to the law, and for inflicting such punishments as are hereby authorized.

11. The justices shall, within the last fortnight of each quarter, respectively make to the Governor a report of the effective strength and condition of the police force at each settlement, of the state of the buildings there, and of the number, state and conduct of the prisoners confined therein.

12. The Governor shall from time to time, by and with the advice of the Legislative Council, frame and publish all necessary rules for the internal discipline of the said police settlements, and of the said places of safe custody and correction; for the clothing, arming, supporting and remunerating the said serjeants and constables, for securing the due performance of their respective duties; for the employment of the penal gang, and also of the serjeants and constables, when not engaged in police duties; for the support of the prisoners in the said houses of correction and places of safe custody; for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes; for the classification of prisoners; for their religious instruction; for the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety amongst them; and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules: and all rules so framed and published shall be transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and shall, until disallowed or altered, remain in full force.

CAP. II.—On the Procedure to be observed by the Special Magistrates in the Exercise of their Jurisdiction.

1. Every justice shall reside within the district to which he is appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed by the Governor.

2. Every justice shall, two days in each week, or oftener if need be, except when absent on visitations, hold at the place of his residence, or at some other convenient place, a session for the hearing and deciding upon such cases as may be brought before him.

3. Every justice shall, once in six months, or oftener if need be, repair to each farm within his district upon which twenty or any greater number of labourers shall be employed, there to take cognizance of such cases as may be brought before him.

4. Every justice shall keep a journal of all the cases brought before him, in which he shall enter, 1st, the date of the complaint; 2d, the name of the complainant; 3d, the substance of the complaint; 4th, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; 5th, the substance of the evidence; 6th, his decision on the case; 7th, whether the decision has been carried into effect; 8th, general remarks.

5. All such journals shall be kept in one uniform manner, to be prescribed for that purpose by the Governor.

6. At the end of six months, the justice shall transmit to the Governor a duplicate of his journal for the preceding six months, with an affidavit thereto annexed, to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which the deponent has been engaged as such justice, during the six months to which it refers, for the purpose of being laid before the Legislative Council.

7. On receiving any complaint, it shall be the duty of the justice to reduce it to writing, and to cause it to be read by, or to read it over to, the complainant, by whom it shall then be subscribed.

8. If the complaint shall appear to the justice immaterial, and not to deserve further inquiry, he may at once dismiss it; but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the complainant to make oath that the complaint is true.

9. Upon taking any complaint, cognizance of which is given to the justice, under and by virtue of the said Act of Parliament, and to the truth of which such oath shall have been so made, the justice shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged, or shall issue, if necessary, a summons for his attendance, as the case may require. The warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed, marked (A.), and the summons in the form annexed, marked (B.)

10. The warrant of arrest shall be issued in all cases where the party is charged with a capital or transportable offence; in all cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged would endeavour to escape; and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay. In all other cases the justice is to proceed in the first instance by summons, if necessary.

11. In

12. At the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, the justice shall in the presence of all parties, or of such of them as, being summoned, shall attend in pursuance of such summons, first read over the written complaint, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining, and the witnesses, taking down in writing the deposition of each witness, which shall be read over to and signed by him.

13. The justice may from time to time adjourn any such proceeding for further inquiry, and if necessary commit the party charged to custody pending such adjournment, or take bail for his appearance. Every such bail or commitment shall be in the annexed forms, marked (D.) and (E.)

14. At the close of such proceedings the justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, which decision he shall reduce into writing, and subscribe with his name.

15. By such decision the justice shall, as law and reason may seem to him to require, either dismiss the complaint, or sanction any lawful compromise between the parties which he may think just, or convict the party charged, unless accused of a capital or transportable offence, in which case he shall take preparatory examination, and proceed according to law in his capacity as justice of the peace, or commit him to prison to take his trial for the imputed offence.

16. If the complaint shall be dismissed, the justice shall in such his written decision state whether it was so dismissed as unproved, or as being frivolous and vexatious, or as being malicious.

17. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, the justice may adjudge the complainant, if a labourer, to any number of stripes not exceeding fifteen; or if the complainant be the employer, the justice may adjudge such employer to the payment of a penalty for the use of the colonial treasury, or the labourer, at his discretion, of not less than 10 s. and not greater than 40 s.

18. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as malicious, it shall be competent to the justice, at the instance of the party charged, to adjudge the complainant, if a labourer, to imprisonment with hard labour, for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty; or, if the employer of any such labourer, to a fine not less than 20 s. and not greater than 5 l., to be applied in manner aforesaid; which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation or otherwise in respect of such his complaint.

19. If the justice shall by such his decision convict the party charged, or shall convict the complainant of preferring a frivolous and vexatious, or a malicious complaint, such conviction shall be drawn up according to the form annexed, marked (F.)

20. If the justice shall commit the party charged to take his trial for the imputed offence, such commitment shall be drawn up in the form annexed, marked (G.)

21. Upon any such conviction as aforesaid by the justice, he shall forthwith issue a warrant for the execution thereof, in the form annexed, marked (H.)

22. All summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders, so to be issued by the justice, shall be executed by the police officers of his district, the justice being nevertheless authorized as occasion may require, to address the same to any other person or persons jointly with, or instead of such officers of police, as to him may seem requisite, and who shall consent to execute the same.

23. Any summons, warrant or order, issued by any justice within his own district, may, without any further authority, be carried into execution in any part of the Colony, though beyond such district.

24. If any person, summoned by the justice as a witness, shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or appearing, shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him by the justice in relation to the matters depending before him, it shall be lawful for the justice to issue his warrant for the arrest of any such defaulter, or to commit him to close custody, there to remain until he shall submit to be so sworn and examined, and to make such answers as aforesaid. Every such warrant of arrest or commitment shall be in the forms annexed, marked (I.) and (K.)

25. If it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Governor and the Legislative Council that the forms of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed are needlessly burdensome upon the justices, or that they impede or interfere with the prompt and effective execution of the law, the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall be entitled to suspend any part of the preceding rules relating to such procedure, or to adapt the same to the circumstances of the case, so as more effectually to promote the punctual, orderly and effective execution of the law; and for that purpose to frame and publish rules and ordinances which shall be transmitted for His Majesty's confirmation, and which, until disallowed, shall be in full force.

26. If any suit or action shall be commenced against any justice, in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done by virtue and in pursuance of this ordinance, if the court shall give judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff shall, by such judgment, be condemned to pay treble costs of suit.

27. If in any such suit or action the justice shall, at any time before final judgment, tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred; and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept such amends and costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court at the trial of such suit, that such amends have been so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff in the amount of the sum so tendered, subject nevertheless to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the defendant.

28. No suit or action shall be brought against any justice in respect of any matter or thing by him done under or in pursuance of this ordinance, unless the same shall be commenced within six months after the cause of action accrued.

Cap. III.—On the Classification of Apprenticed Labourers.

1. In the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope all apprenticed labourers shall be classed as non-prædial labourers.

Cap. IV.—On the Maintenance of the Apprenticed Labourers.

1. Every employer shall be and is hereby required to supply his labourers with such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as by the laws which were in force in this Colony on the 30th day of November last past, an owner was required to supply to, and for any slave, being of the same age and sex as such labourer shall be; and the justices are hereby authorized to substitute such articles of clothing for those by law prescribed as the late protectors of slaves were authorized to do.

Cap. V.—On the Duties to be performed by the Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their Non-performance.

1. Every labourer shall be obliged to work and labour in every day in the year, Sundays and holidays hitherto usually allowed to the labouring population excepted, in the service and for the benefit of his employer.

2. No labourer shall be compelled to work during any sickness rendering him unfit for the same, nor when employed in garden or field labour, shall be compelled to work more than nine hours in each twenty-four hours, in the months of May, June and July, with an interval or intervals for meals and rest not less than two hours; nor more than ten hours in the months of March, April, August and September, with two intervals, not less than three hours; nor more than eleven hours in the remaining five months of the year, with two intervals, not less than four hours: provided, that any labourer employed as a waggon-driver or leader, shall perform his duty as heretofore.

3. For every hour in which any labourer shall absent himself from his employer's service, without reasonable cause, he shall be adjudged to receive not exceeding ten stripes, and so in proportion for every portion of time greater or less than an hour, provided that such number of stripes shall not exceed thirty-nine in the whole.

4. Any labourer absenting himself, without reasonable cause, for more than seven and a half hours in any one week, shall be adjudged a deserter.

5. Any labourer residing in the family of his employer who shall absent himself from his residence during the night without leave obtained, shall, if found one mile distant from such residence, be arrested, and on conviction, be adjudged a deserter, and punished accordingly: provided always, that no employer shall withhold permission for such labourer to attend at any place of worship without reasonable cause to the satisfaction of the justice.

6. Any labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for two days during one we k shall be adjudged a vagabond.

7. Any labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause, for more than six days in any one week, shall be adjudged a runaway.

8. Any labourer who shall, during his apprenticeship, wilfully absent himself from the services of his employer, shall be adjudged and compelled to serve his employer after the expiration of his apprenticeship, for so long a time as he shall have so absented himself from such service, or to make satisfaction to his employer for the loss sustained by such absence: provided, however, that such extra service or compensation shall not be compellable after the expiration of five years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such labourer.

9. The reasonableness of the cause of absence shall, in each case, be decided by the justice.

10. Apprenticed labourers adjudged deserters, shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; those adjudged vagabonds, to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, and to any number of stripes not exceeding fifteen; those adjudged runaways, to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty, and to make such satisfaction to their employers, or to serve after the expiration of their apprenticeship with their employers, during such time as they shall be adjudged by the sentence of any justice.

11. Any labourer convicted of performing his work indolently, carelessly or negligently shall, for the first offence, be adjudged to whipping, not exceeding fifteen stripes; for the second offence, if within two calendar months, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; for the third or any subsequent offence, to confinement with hard labour, for any time not exceeding one fortnight, with whipping, not exceeding twenty stripes.

12. Any

12. Any labourer, who, by the careless use of fire, shall endanger the property of his employer, or any other person, or who shall wantonly injure the property of his employer entrusted to his care, or who shall ill use the cattle or other live stock of his employer, or who shall by gross negligence expose his employer's property to any damage or injury, shall for such offence be adjudged to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty lashes, or to both such punishments: provided that this enactment shall not exempt any such labourer from his liability to such actions or prosecutions, as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him done or omitted, although no such labourer shall be liable to be so sued or prosecuted, both under this ordinance and under such general law as aforesaid.

13. Any labourer who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his employer, shall be liable to one or both of the punishments last aforesaid.

14. Any three or more labourers who shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employers, shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be adjudged to confinement to hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, and to any number of stripes not exceeding thirty-nine.

15. Any three or more labourers who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employers, shall, on conviction, be adjudged to suffer the punishments last aforesaid, or any one of them.

16. Any labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself in an insolent and insubordinate manner towards his employer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his labour, shall for every such offence, on conviction, be adjudged to imprisonment with hard labour, for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping not exceeding fifteen stripes.

17. Provided always, that no female shall be subject to be punished by whipping, for any offence by her committed; but that in all cases aforesaid in which that punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying to the case of males only; and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any such male offender, shall, when committed by females, be punished by confinement in the stocks. The stocks to be employed for that purpose shall be according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the Governor; and no female shall for any offence by her committed be confined in the stocks after sunset or before sunrise, or for more than eight hours in the whole for any one day, or for more than two days consecutively, or for more than six days in the whole for any one offence.

Cap. VI.—On the Duties to be performed by the Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their Non-performance.

1. If the employer of any labourer shall, by force or fraud, protract the daily services of such labourer beyond the period by law allowed for that purpose, he shall forfeit, for the benefit of such labourer, the sum of one shilling in respect of every hour which such service shall be protracted.

2. It shall be the duty of every employer to intimate to the labourers in his employment the commencement and the close of the legal hours of labour.

3. No labourer shall be bound to undertake any task-work, except with his own free assent to the same, save as hereinafter is excepted.

4. Every contract between the employer and the labourer, for the performance of any specific work as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours shall by such employer be reduced into writing, and entered in a book to be kept for that purpose on the farm; which book it shall be the duty of the justice to inspect as often as he shall in manner aforesaid repair to the several farms within his district.

5. No contract between the employer and the labourer for the performance of any such specific or task-work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure and continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of thirty days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties in the presence and with the approbation of the justice, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him before the expiration of such thirty days. And every such approbation of any such contract shall by the justice be attested under his hand in the book so to be kept as aforesaid.

6. It shall be the duty of the justice, before approving any such contract, to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the labourers entering into the same; and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust.

7. In every such contract for task-work, or for extra service extending beyond the period of thirty days, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed.

8. No contract for such extra service as aforesaid shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

9. Upon proof being made, to the satisfaction of the justice, of the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra services, it shall be competent to the justice to award execution against such employer for the amount of such consideration, and if the same shall not be paid within thirty days next after such award, to issue an attachment against the produce, utensils and other chattels upon such farm; which execution and award shall be respectively in the forms annexed, marked (L.) and (M.)

10. Such execution and attachment as aforesaid shall be executed by the serjeant of the police of the district, who shall thereunder seize and sell, for which no auctioneer's license shall be necessary, so much of the produce, utensils, and other chattels as may be found upon such farm, as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, delivering over the surplus, if any, to such employer.

11. Any labourer violating the terms of such contract as aforesaid, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him performed in the discharge of the services owing by him by law to his employer, unless specific penalties are named in the contract.

12. Every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every minor of the age of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his minority, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid.

13. If any employer, or any person who, as manager or otherwise, exercises the authority of the employer over any labourer, shall whip, beat, imprison, confine in the stocks, or otherwise maltreat any such labourer, or shall, by way of punishment, commit any assault upon his person, such employer or other person shall incur a penalty, to be imposed by the justice, not exceeding 5 l., with imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, in default of the payment of such fine.

14. In any such case as last aforesaid, it shall be competent to any labourer, instead of preferring his complaint to the justice, to maintain any civil suit or action, as in the case of any other free person, for damages for such assault; and it shall also be competent to the justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit the offender to take his trial for such offence before any court having jurisdiction in the premises; if any such employer or other person shall be convicted before any such court of any cruelty towards his labourer, then the labourer may be discharged from his apprenticeship by order of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

Cap. VII.—On Offence which may be committed by the Apprenticed Labourers against the State, and the Punishment of such Offences.

1. If any labourer shall be found at any place distant more than five miles from the place of residence, not having with him a written pass for that purpose from his employer, or from the justice of the district to which he belongs, such labourer shall be liable to be apprehended and taken before the justice, and upon proof before the justice made of the facts aforesaid, such labourer shall be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall subject to any such punishment any labourer absenting himself without such pass as aforesaid, at any distance within this Colony from his residence, except as is hereinbefore excepted, during any time in which he may not be bound to labour in the service of his employer, if such labourer shall be so absent in the prosecution of his lawful business, or in attendance upon, or in the way to or from any place of public worship, and shall establish to the satisfaction of any justice before whom he may be so brought, that his absence took place during such time only, and was occasioned only by any such cause as aforesaid.

2. Any person aiding or assisting in the unlawful removal from the Colony of any labourer, shall be liable to a penalty of 50 l. or to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month.

Cap. VIII.—On the Dissolution of the Apprenticeship by Contract or Appraisement.

1. Subject to the regulations hereinafter made, the employer of any labourer may, by his last will or by deed under his hand, at his pleasure, discharge any such labourer, so far as relates to the interest of every such testator or grantor, and that every such discharge shall, as far as relates to the interest of the testator or grantor, as the case may be, but no further or otherwise, be valid and effectual in the law for the perpetual discharge of such labourer: provided nevertheless, that no person having a partial or temporary interest in any labourer, may, to the extent of such interest, effect his discharge gratuitously, unless all other persons having a partial, future or reversionary interest in such labourer, shall consent or be parties to such discharge, or unless such interests shall be purchased in the manner hereinafter provided.

2. And in order to prevent the fraudulent discharge of labourers, incompetent from age or disease to earn their own living; Be it provided, that in case any such deed of discharge shall be executed gratuitously and without any valuable consideration passing to the employer or other person effecting the same, the labourer so to be discharged shall, previously to the actual execution of any such deed, appear before the justice for the district in which the labourer is resident; and if it shall appear to the said justice that such labourer is under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or is labouring under any habitual disease or infirmity of mind or body, the employer or person effecting such discharge shall, under his hand, execute and deliver to the said justice a bond to His Majesty in the penal sum of 50 l., with a condition thereunder written for the defeazance thereof, if such labourer shall be properly fed, clothed and maintained until he shall have attained the age of 14 years, or until the time when the term of apprenticeship would have expired, if such discharge had not been made, made, whichever shall first happen; and no such gratuitous discharge shall be valid and effectual in the law until shall bond as aforesaid shall be duly executed.

3. Provided nevertheless, that no such bond as aforesaid shall be required in the case of any discharge by will; but if at the time of the death of the testator, the labourer so discharged shall be under the age of 14 years, or above the age of 50 years, or labouring under any such disease or infirmity as aforesaid, the estate of every such testator shall be liable to and chargeable with the maintenance of such labourer, as fully as if the said testator had in his life time executed such bond as aforesaid.

4. And to prevent ignorant labourers effecting the purchase of their discharge from persons unable to make any valid title to the same, it is and shall be lawful for any person being the employer of any labourer in the said Colony, to contract with such labourer through the agency of any justice as aforesaid, acting for and on behalf of such labourer, but not otherwise, for the discharge of the said labourer, at a price to be agreed upon between the said employer and the said justice respectively; and in case of any such contract, it shall be the duty of the said justice, on behalf of the said labourer, to satisfy himself that the person proposing to effect the said discharge has good right and title in the law and is competent to effect the same; and it shall also be the duty of the said justice, without fee or reward, to prepare in every such case the proper deed of discharge, which shall in all cases be executed in the presence of and attested by the said justice, or some proper person, to be especially appointed by him, to be such witness thereto; and every such deed being so executed, shall by such justice be enrolled in the supreme court of justice within one calendar month next after the date and execution thereof; and in case any such deed shall not be so enrolled by the said justice within the said period of one calendar month, the said justice shall incur and be liable to the payment of a fine of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 50*l.*

5. And to provide for the discharge of labourers desiring to obtain the same by purchase, in cases where their employers may be unwilling or unable to contract for such discharge, the employer, or any person having any interest in any such labourer, shall be unwilling to effect his discharge, or shall by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease or charge upon, or interest in such labourer being vested in any other person, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge of such labourer; or if the employer, or any other person having a charge upon or interest in any such labourer shall be a minor, or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or if the real employer of any such labourer shall be absent from the Colony, or shall not be known; or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in the Colony, wherein the right to the service of such labourer shall or may be in controversy, or if the employer of any such labourer shall demand as the price of his discharge a greater sum of money than may appear to the said justice to be the fair and just value thereof, then and in each and every of the cases aforesaid any judge, on application to him for that purpose made by the said justice, shall issue a summons under his hand, requiring the employer of such labourer to appear before him at some convenient time and place, to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published by the said justice in the public Gazette of the Colony of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid, and in such notice all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the labourer proposed to be discharged, either in their own right, or as the agents, guardians, attornies, trustees or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claims.

6. At the time appointed for any such meeting as aforesaid, any judge in the presence of the said justice, and also in the presence of the employer of the labourer proposed to be discharged, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer, shall proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged by the said justice, and by the employer or other persons claiming any interest in the services of the labourer proposed to be discharged, and attending in pursuance of any such notice; and in case the said parties, or any of them, shall refuse to effect such discharge at a price approved by the said justice, or in case it shall be made to appear to any judge, that a valid and effectual discharge of such labourer cannot legally be effected by private contract, or that the employer of such labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such labourer, is a minor, or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic; or that the employer of the labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such labourer, is absent from the said Colony, or is unknown, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice in the Colony wherein the right to the services of such labourer is in controversy; then, and in every such case, any judge shall require the justice and the employer of such labourer, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of his services for the remainder of such apprenticeship, and the said judge shall himself nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or attending shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said judge shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such employer.

7. The appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid, shall be duly sworn by and before any judge, to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the value of the services of the labourer so proposed to be discharged; and within seven days next after such their appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the said services, and shall certify such their valuation to any judge, under their hands; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said judge within the said term of seven days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall within the next succeeding seven days certify his valuation to the said judge; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or in their default by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and enrolled among the records of the Supreme Court of the Colony.

8. Provided, nevertheless, that if it shall be made to appear to any judge, within six weeks next after such valuation shall have been made, that in the making thereof the said appraisers or umpire, or any of them, acted fraudulently or unjustly, or under the influence of any improper motive, or under any mistake as to the nature of their or his duty, or under any misapprehension of any material matter of fact, then, but not otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said judge to set aside the said valuation, and to declare the same to be void, and to direct another valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, for which purpose new appraisers and a new umpire shall in manner aforesaid be appointed and sworn, and shall proceed to make a second valuation, which being certified to the said judge in manner aforesaid, shall be binding and conclusive: provided that such second or any subsequent valuation may in like manner be set aside by any such judge on the grounds aforesaid, until a valuation is made not open to any such objection.

9. Provided also, that if the amount of any such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned, within three calendar months next after the enrolment thereof, such enrolment shall be cancelled.

10. Upon or within three calendar months next after the enrolment of any such valuation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any justice, out of any monies to be supplied to him for that purpose by the labourer proposed to be discharged, to pay to the treasurer of the Colony the appraised value of the services of such labourer, taking a receipt in writing from such treasurer for every such payment; and any judge shall, upon application to him for that purpose made by the said justice, make an order for the enrolment of such receipt, and shall by such order further proceed to declare and adjudge that the labourer, by or on behalf of whom such money hath been paid, is discharged; and such labourer shall thereupon be and be deemed to be discharged from such apprenticeship.

11. The money to arise from the discharge of any labourer by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned shall remain in the hands of the treasurer of the Colony, and shall bear interest at and after the rate of four pounds per cent. per annum, and His Majesty's revenue in the said Colony shall and is hereby declared to be pledged and responsible for the due payment of such principal money and interest; or shall in the discretion of such treasurer be invested in his name, in good and sufficient securities; and any judge shall, and he is hereby authorized, upon application to him for that purpose made, to direct that the money in the hands of the said treasurer and the interest accruing on such money, shall be the property of the person who was entitled to the services of such discharged labourer, and shall be subject and liable to all such and the same uses, trusts, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands of what nature or kind soever, as such services were subject unto at such time of the discharge of such labourer. And the treasurer shall hold the said money and the interest accruing thereupon, subject to such order as any judge may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, and upon notice to all other persons interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make; and such principal money and interest shall by the treasurer be paid and disposed of in pursuance of, and in obedience to, any such order.

12. It shall be lawful for the judges to make and prescribe, and from time to time to revoke and alter, as occasion may require, all such rules and orders as may be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction hereby in them vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to or interested in any question so depending before them.

13. It shall be lawful for the judges respectively to appoint such and so many commissioners as they shall see fit, to do all such matters and things with respect to the valuation of apprenticeships, as the said judges are hereby authorized and required to do.

Cap. IX.—On the Apprenticeship of Children.

1. Every indenture of apprenticeship to be made and entered into by any such justice as aforesaid, in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament, on behalf of any children of any labourer shall be in the form annexed, marked with the letter (N.), and shall be kept and recorded in the office of the justice for the district to which such apprenticed child may belong.

2. No child born of any female labourer, which labourer was herself the child of an apprenticed labourer, shall be bound an apprentice under the provisions of this ordinance.

Cap. X.—On the Alienation by Sale, or Will, of the Services of Apprenticed Labourers.

1. The right or interest of any employer to and in the services of any labourers as aforesaid, shall, upon the death of any such employer, pass to and become vested in such person as, if the said Act had not been passed, would by will or descent, as the case may be, have been entitled to such labourer, as his slave, and such right or interest shall pass and be transferable, inter vivos, in such manner and form, and under and by virtue of such deeds, instruments, and conveyances as slaves have hitherto been transferable, and have passed in this Colony, and shall be liable to be seized and taken in execution and sold under process of law in satisfaction of any sentence or judgment of any court of competent jurisdiction.

2. Provided

2. Provided always, that no labourer shall be publicly or privately exhibited, or be liable or compelled to attend in person at the time or place of any sale or transfer of his services.

CAP. XI.—On the Relation in which the Apprenticed Labourers will stand towards the State.

1. No labourer shall, during the continuance of his apprenticeship, be liable or competent to serve His Majesty in any civil office or in any military capacity within the said Colony, or to enjoy or exercise any political franchise therein.

2. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt any such labourer from the obligation of rendering to His Majesty any service, civil or military, which, in case or in the prospect of any invasion, rebellion, or any great public exigency, may by His Majesty, or by the Governor for the time being, or by any other lawful authority, be imposed upon him.

3. Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall extend to disqualify any labourer from undertaking and discharging any office or employment in the service of any corporate or ecclesiastical body, or of any person, in cases where such employments or offices may not be connected with the discharge of any military or political duties.

CAP. XII.—Explanation of Terms used in this Ordinance.

Wherever the words "judge," "justices," "employers," and "labourers," are used in this ordinance, they shall be construed to mean respectively, the chief justice, or any judge of the supreme court of this Colony, the special justices or magistrates; the persons entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers, and the apprenticed labourers, all as mentioned in the Act aforesaid; and the words "his" and "person" shall be construed to mean respectively "his," "her" or "their," and "person" or "persons," as the case may be.
